Pandemonium gripping gold

LONDON (AP) — Pandemonium struck the world's gold markets today as buyers frightened by the deepening international political crisis drove the price of the precious metal above $600 ($690 Canadian) an ounce for the first time in history.

The U.S. dollar fell sharply and in New York, the Canadian dollar was down 3-100 at $0.8546.

Stock prices at Toronto and New York continued to tumble in heavy trading, but in New York bargain hunting and some strength from oil stocks reduced the Dow Jones loss to 4.95, moving the industrial average to 819.62.

It had tumbled by as much as 11 points shortly after the market opened.

In Toronto, the stock market fell sharply in active trading.

The TSE 300 index was down 17.93 to 1,788.15.

All of the 14 stock groups declined, with the largest drop in real estate and construction.

The price of gold rocketed to $649.73 in Hong Kong, then slid back to $613.26. The closing rate was $72.01 above Wednesday's closing price of $541.25, while the high for the day represented a gain of $108.48.

Closing gold prices Thursday in U.S. dollars a troy ounce:

London-630.00 (record high);
Paris-644.18;
Frankfurt-631.03;
Zurich-635.00 (record high);
Hong Kong-613.26.

When the London market opened, bullion traded at a record bid-and-asked price spread of $615 to $630. At mid-afternoon, London's major bullion dealers fixed the price at a record $634 an ounce, up $74.50 from Wednesday's afternoon fixing and up $66.50 from the Wednesday's closing rate of $567.50.

In early New York trading, Republic National Bank quoted gold at $630 an ounce bid, $635 asked and said the market was "very busy."

In Zurich, Europe's biggest bullion mart, trading resumed after a five-day holiday period and gold opened at a spread of $615-$625. The late price of $635 was $118 higher than the last Zurich selling price of $517 an ounce on Dec. 28.

The price of other metals also climbed, with silver rising to a record $41,50 an ounce in London after closing at $40 Wednesday.

Gold dealers in Hong Kong reported hectic trading with more than 700,000 taels changing hands, compared with a normal daily turnover of 550,000 taels. A tael weighs 1.203 Troy ounces.

In Ottawa it was announced the government bought $10.7 million worth of gold in December as part of an international monetary fund program to increase gold reserves. The transaction brings gold reserves to $1.02 billion.

Banks sold out

Pity the Victoria man with $1,000 who heard this morning that the price of bullion was rocketing past $700 Canadian on world markets and decided to buy his very own ounce of gold.

If he went to the main Victoria branch Bank of Nova Scotia, he would have discovered, after waiting up to one hour in line, that there simply aren't any one-ounce wafers of the precious metal available.

The same situation applied in Toronto where buyers formed long lineups at gold dealers and stock market investors were snapping up gold mining shares.

"It's almost the herd instinct," said Stephen Harvey, vice-president of Deak Co. Ltd. in Toronto, where crowds were lining up along the sidewalk outside the foreign exchange building.

"To tell the truth, it's an almost frightening sight."

Things weren't quite so hectic in Victoria, but the two phone lines to the Bank of Nova Scotia's securities department were jammed most of the time.

Supervisor Velda Donkin said that in addition to the price of an ounce of gold itself — about $642 U.S. and climbing this morning — there is also a $2.50 melting premium, the bank's $10 commission, a $3 shipping charge and a $5 Telex charge to place the order to Toronto.

Add to that the exchange to bring the Canadian dollars up to U.S. strength and the cost of a single ounce of gold to the hapless Victorian with $1,000 is $765.12.

TEHRAN (AP) — An angry mob of fist-waving Iranians sent UN Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim fleeing in his limousine from a cemetery on Tehran's outskirts today just minutes after he arrived to lay a wreath at the graves of revolutionary dead.

In the city tens of thousands of Iranians gathered outside the occupied U.S. embassy to protest against the Waldheim visit in one of the biggest such demonstrations in recent weeks.

About 500 people, believed to include relatives of those buried at the sprawling Behesht Zahra cemetery, converged on the car carrying Waldheim to the cemetery from a pad where his helicopter touched down.

Waldheim, in Iran in an effort to defuse the crisis over the U.S. embassy hostage-taking, was on the ground for only six minutes and never left the car. As the chanting crowd encircled his car, he ordered the driver to return to the helicopter.

"Go! Go!" Waldheim could be seen shouting to his driver.

Once aboard the helicopter, the craft lifted off immediately, flying Waldheim back to the city, where he met with Foreign Minister Sadegh Ghotbzadeh for about three hours. Asked how the talks on the hostages were going, Waldheim, who looked tired, said: "The talks are continuing and it would not be helpful for me to elaborate at this point."

Waldheim later met with several hundred crippled Iranians said to have been brutalized under the regime of the ousted Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi.

The UN chief said he was "shocked" by the encounter.

"I shall bring this message of suffering to the United Nations and before the world community," he told the crowd, which filled three rooms in a former officers' club in central Tehran.

"We shall certainly do whatever we can do to assure that the mutilation of human beings will never take place again."

The visit with the disabled had been cancelled Wednesday when anti-Waldheim street demonstrations broke out and the government said it had uncovered an murder plot against Waldheim. Ghotbzadeh claimed the plot had "foreign backing."

It was also reported Waldheim met today with members of Iran's revolutionary council. A report he would meet with the Ayatollah Khomeini Friday at the Moslem leader's headquarters at Qom was later denied.

The sudden rush by the cemetery crowd apparently caught police and revolutionary guards by surprise. Only about 20 were stationed at the area where Waldheim landed and they were unable to hold back the crowd.

The angry demonstrators shouted demands that "Waldheim should be thrown out of Iran." The also screamed slogans against the United States and the United Nations.

Waldheim flew to the cemetery south of the capital in response to a demand by the militants holding 50 hostages in the U.S. Embassy since Nov. 4. It is the burial place of many who died in the revolution that overthrew Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi last February.

Carter orders SALT stall

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — President Carter has asked Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd to delay Senate floor consideration of the SALT II treaty because of Soviet military moves in Afghanistan.

"While the president continues to believe that ratification is in the national security interests of the United States, he has concluded that the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan in defiance of the UN Charter has made consideration of the SALT II treaty inappropriate at this time," White House press secretary Jodi Powell told reporters today.

The Carter move was made amid reports Soviet forces were battling Afghan forces in the southern provincial capital of Kandahar and the eastern city of Jalalabad near Pakistan in their attempt to take consolidate their hold on Afghanistan.

Jalalabad is strategic because it has an airfield capable of handling large Soviet cargo planes and because it straddles a major road leading from the Pakistan border to Kabul.

It was the first confirmed clash between the Soviet troops and Afghan army

No gas tax hike, Trudeau pledges

OTTAWA (CP) — A new Liberal government would not raise taxes on gasoline sold at the pump as has been promised by the Conservatives, Opposition Leader Pierre Trudeau said today.

"We will not raise the gas tax and we will implement fairer ways to deal with increased energy costs," Trudeau told a luncheon gathering of party workers and candidates here in his first Feb. 18 campaign appearance of the New Year.

Trudeau gave no further details of revised Liberal party energy and economic policies, saying only those views would be outlined soon.

Laetrile to get human trials

By PAUL JACOBS
Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — The U.S. Food and Drug Administration has indicated that it will approve the first full-fledged scientific study of the effectiveness of laetrile in treating cancer patients.

One spokesman for the FDA said he expected that the go-ahead for the human trials would come within the next two weeks.

The drug would be tested only on individuals for whom other forms of treatment have failed or where no proven treatment has been available.

FDA approval is needed before the National Cancer Institute can go ahead with human laetrile trials, which the institute first proposed almost three years ago.

The cancer institute has been asked to repeat a study in which the laetrile to be used on cancer patients was tested for toxicity in rabbits, according to Lorraine Kershner, a spokesman for the institute.

The test has been repeated and no ill effects were found, said Paul Davignon, chief of the cancer institute's drug preparation branch.

The results of the toxicity test should remove the last remaining obstacle to beginning the laetrile trials.

In a year of negotiations with the FDA, the cancer in[illegible] [illegible]eral modifications in its study, one which would require a study of how laetrile was broken down in the body even before its anti-tumor properties are checked.

The scientific establishment has generally dismissed laetrile as ineffective. All but a few studies in animals have shown the drug to have little or no effect in shrinking tumors.

In humans, the claims for laetrile have been anecdotal and difficult to evaluate scientifically.

Mad dash on for election ad time

By CAROL GOAR
FP News Service

OTTAWA — When every minute represents a multi-thousand-dollar opportunity to sell their leader, the political backroom boys abandon all pretence of gentlemenly restraint.

There is no room for manners in the messy squabble now raging [illegible] organizers for the Feb. 18 election. At stake is $5-million-worth of broadcast time set aside for paid political advertisements. There are 390 crucial minutes on each network to be carved up among not only the Tories, Liberals and New Democrats, but the six smaller parties as well. And, like children fighting over pieces of birthday cake, they're all determined to grab all they can.

The fighting ends Friday at 5 p.m. By that time the Canadian Radio Telecommunications Commission, the federal agency which regulates the airwaves, is expected to impose arbitr[illegible] allocations which will be binding on all parties.

There could hardly be a more reluctant arbitrator. Under the Canada Elections Act, the CRTC has the legal obligation to sort out s[illegible] agency [illegible]ently hoped the parties would be able to agree among themselves.

Last time, it worked that way. Long before the battle of the airwaves began in mid-April, the six official parties sat down and agreed the Liberals should get 155 minutes, the Tories 134, the NDP 63, the Social Credit 22 and the Communists and Marxist-Leninists eight minutes each.

The allotments were worked out basically to reflect each party's number of Commons seats and the percentage of popular support it had garnered in the 1974 election.

"We hoped they'd work things out among themselves again and the commission would merely have to agree or disagree, but it hasn't worked out that way," said Charles Tierney of the CRTC.

The trouble began almost as soon as the election writ was issued on Dec. 14.

As required, the officially registered parties — there were nine this time — went through the motions of trying to reach a consensus. But when three of the minor parties, notably the Rhinoceros Party of Montreal, a band of crazies with a platform of witty nonsense, demanded that all parties be given equal air time, the discussions degenerated into an exercise in futility.

The New Democrats had a more serious complaint.

They believed the whole system of using [illegible] neat mathmematical formula reflecting past performance needed to be re-examined. They were particularly upset when the Tories suggested the whole procedure be done by computer this time.

The Liberals were not altoge[illegible] comfortable with the old formula, but were prepared to live with it, said chief organizer Gordon Ashworth.

Since agreement among the participants appeared remote, the CRTC proposed its own system of allocation and gave the parties until Dec. 31 to express their views. By that deadline, it had received four official objections, so the commission's executive committee met to thrash out the problem. To date, no conclusion has been reached.

BCR pickets bring CN slowdown

VANCOUVER (CP) — Canadian National Railways operations in British Columbia were curtailed this morning after striking B.C. Rail workers set up picket lines at CN yards in Surrey and Prince George.

The picket line was placed at CN's Port Mann yard in Surrey because the national railway has been handling chemicals, usually hauled over B.C. Rail lines, said Norm Farley, chairman of the Joint Council of Railway Unions, representing 2,200 B.C. Rail workers.

CN also has been using some B.C. Rail equipment, he said.

It was not known how many CN workers refused to cross the picket lines, but CN spokesman Al Menard said operations would be curtailed.

"It certainly affects all inbound and outbound traffic as well as the industrial switching in Vancouver," he said. "It's our major yard in Vancouver . . . it will affect most of our operations here."

The B.C. Rail workers have been without a contract since July 31 and on strike since Dec. 18.

Meanwhile, a B.C. Labor Relations Board ruling on negotiation of one of the major stumbling blocks — the railway's demand that four-man train crews be reduced by one where appropriate — is expected today.

The council appealed to the board for legal reassurance that its constitution prohibits the group from negotiating a reduction in crew size, an issue which Farley says is out of bounds for the council.

He says only the United Transportation Union — the only union affected by the issue — has the right to discuss a self-interest clause such as manning.

The board decision is not, however, expected to speed up the contract talks or bring an early end to the strike.

Union officials say there are still more than 100 outstanding issues.

The strike has halted all northern shipment of coal, potash, sulphur and lumber and put part of B.C.'s economy into cold storage.

THE OUTCASTS

Body found near park

An autopsy was performed today on the body of an unidentified man found on rocks near Banfield Park Wednesday afternoon.

A city police spokesman said a preliminary examination suggests the man may have drowned.

Police have not yet been able to establish the identity of the man, described as in his late 20s, about five feet 10 inches tall, 160 pounds, and with long brown hair.

"That would be if we had one-ounce wafers in stock," Donkin said: "All we have are 5-ounce and 10-ounce."

She said that 35 to 40 people a day are coming to the bank to buy gold.

Back in Toronto, Harvey was asked how high the price will go.

"It's not a question of whether it will go past $1,000; it's a question of when," he said.

Some purchasers are looking for silver, but returning to the mythical Victorian with $1,000 to invest, he's out of luck again.

"We do sell silver but it has to be ordered," Donkin said.

"You have to order a minimum 100 ounces," she added.

The price of silver — the "poor man's gold" — was nearly $48 Canadian an ounce today.

But with the 100-ounce minimum, an investor needs $4,800 Canadian to place his order and more money to cover the bank's commission, the Telex charges and shipping.

Interestingly, it was business as usual at Victoria jewelry stores, with no noticeable increase as a result of the skyrocketing precious metal markets.

Larry Frank, of Frank and Sons Jewellery Ltd., 720 Yates, said he wouldn't advise jewelry as a hedge against inflation.

Frank confessed he was amazed at what is happening to gold prices.

"But it's a make-believe kind of thing," he said.

Garth Woodsworth, a partner in Midas Gold and Silver Jewellery Distributors Ltd., 645 Fort, agreed that jewelry is a poor investment in the normal sense.

"Although it would have been a good investment if you'd bought back when gold was $200 an ounce," he said.

He said the jewelry market often quietens when precious metal markets are hyperactive.

"Everybody sort of waits to see where it will settle down before moving," Woodsworth said.

Where will it all end?

"If you have a dollar bill in your pocket you're robbing yourself," said Don McEwen, chairman of McEwen Easson Ltd., a Toronto-based firm which manages a number of mutual funds that invest strictly in gold and gold-related securities.

"The purchasing power of fiat money will continue to decline."

It's all in the juice

KIDDERMINSTER, England (AP) — A watch repairman claims to have discovered a new source of energy — lemon power.

Anthony Ashill, remembering his schoolboy physics, connected two wires to a lemon with a piece of copper and a piece of zinc and soldered them onto a motor, hoping the acetic acid in the lemon would react with the copper and zinc to produce an electric current.

That was in July, and the small electric motor still is going strong on lemon power, Ashill told the London Daily Telegraph.

"It has amazed me how much juice there appears to be in a single lemon," he said.

But Maurice Weaver of Lucas Industries, one of Britain's largest battery makers, said lemon power is impractical as a substitute for traditional car batteries because too many lemons would be needed.

Trident aid discussed

Finance Minister Hugh Curtis says it is time he spoke with Premier Bill Bennett about the fate of the Sidney-based Trident Aircraft Ltd. but he won't say what he will be recommending.

Curtis says he intends to discuss Trident with Bennett either today or Friday.

Asked whether he will push for the province to pick up the slack in funding for the company, the minister replied: "We're examining all possible options with respect to Trident, not the least of which is to focus the federal government's attention on the problem once again."

It was the recent federal decision not to come up with a promised $4 million in funding that put Trident's future in jeopardy in the first place.

Now you're talkin' taste.

Soon you may want to get into B.C. Pen

NEW WESTMINSTER (CP) — People will be trying to get into B.C. Penitentiary instead of out of the century-old prison if Mayor Muni Evers has his way.

Evers says that once the last prisoner is removed March 31, the fortress-like institution on the banks of the Fraser River could become an exciting tourist attraction.

The imposing building with its tall grey walls would be an ideal spot for restaurants, a cultural centre, commercial office space or even a trade show centre, Evers said Wednesday.

Land around the prison could be used for a riverside housing development.

Evers conceded his ideas depend on the federal government agreeing to hand the building and surrounding land over to the city.

The prison is being phased out in favor of newer facilities throughout the province, such as the new maximum security Kent Institution near Agassiz in the Fraser Valley.

The 99 protective custody prisoners remaining are scheduled to be transferred to prisons elsewhere in B.C. and in Ontario and Saskatchewan within the next three months.

Much of the prison, which once housed 750 men, is already closed off.

Lawyer's ads 'unbecoming': law society

VANCOUVER (CP) — Vancouver lawyer Jack James said Wednesday that a finding by the Law Society of British Columbia that he is guilty of unbecoming conduct in advertising his downtown Vancouver Law Shoppe brings into question whether the legal profession should be self-governing.

"I'm very disappointed they did not take the public interest into mind," he said. "Really, it brings into question whether they (the benchers) should be self-governing if they can't govern in the interests of the public."

James was commenting in an interview on the finding by a three-member disciplinary committee of the society that he was guilty of conduct unbecoming a member of the society through the price-list advertising that accompanied the opening of his Law Shoppe in downtown Vancouver last September.

A $19.95 special on wills was included in the advertising.

In particular, James was cited by the committee for an advertisement in the morning daily The Province that was found to be in direct contravention of the society's professional conduct handbook.

"In the committee's opinion, the advertisement breached those standards of good taste and dignity appropriate for members of this society," the ruling said.

"The said advertisement, by reason of its form and content, was promotional and slick and went beyond the reasonable needs of imparting information to members of the public."

The committee also ruled that a reference to "VISA, Master Charge, accepted" in the ad was contrary to a benchers' resolution passed on Sept. 24; that the sign displayed outside the Law Shoppe contravened the professional conduct handbook by displaying a logo; and that use of a name such as the Law Shoppe on the sign and in the ad gave the impression the practice might be carried on as an entity separate from the lawyer, "which has implications to the unlimited liability to which lawyers are exposed in the course of their practices."

Society deputy secretary Dennis Olmstead said the committee will reconvene at a date to be set to hear submissions on the penalty to be imposed against James.

Describing himself as being in a "Catch 22 situation," James referred to a B.C. Supreme Court ruling last spring in a case concerning another lawyer, that the legal profession is covered by the federal Combines Investigation Act, although the court also ruled that benchers are entitled to regulate advertising by lawyers.

"Yet the federal justice department does nothing about it," he said. "If any other business — for example, a potato marketing board — had got into this kind of situation, they would be charged tomorrow."

Probe on ship rescue urged

NANAIMO (CP) — A union representing ships' officers has called for an inquiry by the federal transport ministry into the foundering of the freighter Lee Wang Zin in British Columbia coastal waters.

Arnold Davis, a spokesman for the Canadian Merchant Service Guild, said Wednesday the loss of the ship and presumed deaths of 30 crew members show the inadequacy of search-and-rescue facilities on the northern B.C. coast.

He predicted similar incidents until the situation is improved.

Davis said he wondered why there was a four-hour delay between the sending of the first distress signals from the ship Christmas Day and the finding of the vessel by a rescue helicopter from Prince Rupert less than 160 kilometres away.

Officials have said the search was hampered by high winds and heavy seas.

Ray Skelly, MP for Comox-Powell River, said the sinking indicates the need for an additional search-and-rescue base between Comox and Alaska, preferably at Prince Rupert.

The Lee Wang Zin, which sank Tuesday after a week of drifting upside down, was carrying a load of iron pellets from Tasu in the Queen Charlotte Islands when it capsized.

The bodies of two Taiwanese crew members have been recovered and the other 28 men on board are believed to have perished.

Captain Bob Fisher, the British Columbia coastal pilot who guided the ship out of Tasu through a treacherous passage, was also critical of the way Canadian rescue officials conducted their operation.

Fisher said in an interview the search was slow in locating the vessel.

He said the rescue team should have located the distressed ship within 20 minutes to an hour after the first signal. He said he had relayed the general vicinity of the ship to rescue officials the day of the tragedy because he knew the planned speed and course.

The ship sank Tuesday in about 300 metres of water about 40 kilometres off the northern tip of the Queen Charlottes and there has been some leakage of oil that U.S. coast guard authorities are watching.

An estimated 1,500 gallons of oil, described by one official as "thick like axle grease," has been removed from beaches near Ketchikan, Alaska, the U.S. Coast Guard said.

Coast Guard PO Phillip Franklin said Wednesday that efforts to clean up the oil, spilled from a freighter which capsized last week, may take two more weeks. The cleanup already has cost $250,000.

Meanwhile, B.C. coroner Harold Murphy says autopsies done on the two recovered bodies show the men died from drowning. There is no trace of fire or explosion.

Murphy and team of investigators are looking into the reason the ship capsized with a report expected Friday. One possibility being explored is that the iron pellets shifted.

Better now

At a time when most agree that governments' budgets must be tightened and trimmed, it becomes economic blasphemy to speak otherwise. There is, however, one vital sector of society to which government must pay more attention if it is to avoid paying a higher price later on.

The unemployment rate among Canada's youth is steadily increasing and the prophecies of social scientists are starting to be fulfilled. Across the country incidents of vandalism and petty crime are a growing concern. The suicide rate among young people is increasing. In Toronto for instance, the suicide rate among 10 to 24 year olds is 30 per cent higher than it was seven years ago. More young people than ever are receiving social assistance.

According to the immigration and employment ministry there were 402,000 unemployed young people in Canada during October — over half the total number of unemployed people. Of the total number of Canadians looking for work in November, 15.4 per cent were between the ages of 15 and 19, 10.7 per cent between the ages of 20 and 24. That compares with the 5.3 per cent 25 years of age and older who were looking for jobs.

It is obvious that youth make up more than their fair share of the unemployment rolls. That, coupled with the recognition of the value of meaningful employment for the self-esteem of the individual, must indicate to government, educators, employers and union leaders that society is not responding adequately to the needs of youth.

Because it is a national problem, the federal government must take the lion's share of the responsiblity in providing the medicine necessary to prevent youth-oriented social ills before they become unmanageable. Whichever party takes the reins of government Feb. 18, it must move quickly to provide or encourage realistic job opportunities for young Canadians.

The contradiction that there is in Canada both a shortage of skilled tradesmen and a high level of unemployment is unacceptable. It would seem such an anomaly could be removed through wise co-ordination of incentives to employers and educational institutes to provide proper training opportunities.

The Tory government, before it fell, promised a Youth Employment Secretariat to co-ordinate various government schemes aimed at lowering youth unemployment. A tax credit was also offered to employers as an incentive to hire young people. Presumably these measures will make up part of the Conservative party's election platform. But as yet there has been no word from the two major opposition parties on how they would tackle the problem.

Spending money now to see that youth can attain meaningful employment would be far more humane, and perhaps cheaper, than spending money later on cures for the social ills created by unemployment.

Preventing tragedy

The devastating New Year's Eve fire in Chapais, Quebec that took, at last count, 44 lives is a horrendous tragedy, and one can feel sympathy for the victims, their families and friends.

Yet, like so many other tragedies, it is a tragedy that might have been prevented — and that is perhaps the greatest tragedy of all.

It is a tragedy that could not have occurred in Victoria — at least not in the same way — because Victoria's fire regulations prevent the same combination of circumstances developing as occurred in Chapais. In particular, the problem of rapidly-burning, tinder-dry fir boughs should never occur in Victoria because the use of live Christmas trees and similar decorations is banned in the city for such public events.

Fire Chief Eric Simmons says his department receives a few grumbles each year from groups and institutions which promise that their fir or cedar decorations would be quite safe. Yet the department remains adamant. Simmons agrees that most of live decorations probably would not cause trouble, but, as Chapais has so brutally pointed out, it takes only one mistake in such a situation for a tragedy to develop.

In recent months, complaints have been surfacing in Victoria that fire safety regulations in general are perhaps over-strict, nit-picking, and difficult to abide by.

Chapais should be a reminder to all of us that the regulations are there for a reason: the prevention of tragedy.

Apathy threatens elections

WASHINGTON — At the end of each presidential election year, instead of at the beginning, there is much talk about the indifference of the American voters, and even about the decline of the democratic process in the United States.

Now is the time at the beginning of the 1980s to review the record of the 60s and 70s, for the era of "participatory democracy" was marked by a great deal of noise and remarkably little "participation" on election day. Some relevant statistics:

—In each of the last four presidential elections, the percentage of eligible voters who actually cast ballots decreased from 63.8 in 1960 to 54.4 in 1976, when 70 million eligible Americans failed to vote.

Interest declining

—The American Bar Association's committee on election reform noted that the record was even worse in the congressional elections of the 70s when as many as 100 million eligible voters were no-shows.

—The Bar Association added: "Fewer than 28 per cent of Jimmy Carter's fellow citizens voted for him for president in 1976. Gov. Brendan Byrne of New Jersey received a mandate of less than 15 percent of the eligible vote in his successful 1977 re-election bid. Mayor Ed Koch of New York City was the choice of less than 12 per cent of New York's voters. Sen. Henry 'Scoop' Jackson won the 1976 New York presidential primary by garnering less than six per cent of the potential vote."

The paradox of this downward trend is that it occurred during a time of unprecedented expansion in the nation's communications, and also during a period of widespread liberalization in the procedures and statutes governing registration and voting.

For example, in the past two decades, the poll tax was eliminated, young people between 18 and 21 were given the vote for the first time, residency requirements were eased, unreasonable and inequitable registration dates were discarded, and many states initiated new devices to increase the voting, including mobile registration centers, postcard registration, and even election day registration.

Also, as Curtis B. Gans of the Committee for the Study of the American Electorate has pointed out, while the Voting Rights Act of 1965 enfranchised millions of blacks, the black voting record has declined at about the same rate as the rest of the vote, and the 18-21 year vote is the lowest of any other group of able-bodied Americans.

Why this troubling record and what can be done about it? The Bar Association Committee blamed it on, among other things, political mistrust, the decline of allegience to political parties, a widespread feeling of "helplessness" among the people to change anything by voting, particularly among the poor and the poorly educated; the remaining mechanical barriers to voting, and the complexities of the absentee ballot voting system at a time when the people were moving from one place to another as never before.

Among the remedies they suggested for discussion were changing federal and state election laws, reforming the presidential primary system, which will be larger and less coherent in 1980 than in 1976, changing the time of elections to weekends or national holidays, and establishng a fairer system of redistricting.

In this particular Bar Association study, it was also noted that this problem was so serious that it could be dealt with only by a much wider discussion among the people in general and by intensive education of the young in the later years of high school and in college.

"Our committee felt that the exercise of presidential leadership would call widespread attention to the problem and give it the attention it deserves." But while the Bar Association voted this year for a presidential commission to analyze and publicize the problem, no such presidential commission has reported.

Debates help

In fact, there is considerable criticism in Washington now of President Carter's decision to avoid a debate in Des Moines this month on the ground that he was preoccupied with the Iranian affair. For there is clearly no moratorium on White House politics these days. The argument for the debates was precisely that such face-to-face discussions among the candidates on nation-wide television would at least focus attention on the election process and on the issues up for decision in the parimaries before they start.

Failing presidential leadership on this public indifference, it will be left to the press and to the educational institutions to give this the priority it needs. "What if we held an election and nobody came?" Gans asked. It is almost getting that bad.

RICHARD GWYN

Trudeau will win ... maybe

OTTAWA — Most times, New Year's predictions are a snap for a pundit. By the time the events predicted don't happen, readers have forgotten what it was the pundit had predicted. This time, the election blocks the view, much as might a snow plough come to rest in your living-room. The February 18 election date is far too close for a pundit's comfort.

Still, duty calls, so here goes.

One election outcome really is a snap to forecast. The Rhinoceros Party, which last time around won 65,585 votes, will break into the six-figures at least, and so should qualify for chunks of free TV air-time in several provinces in the next election. Most Canadians then may have the chance to see what was, surely, the most spectacular media event of the May 1979 election, but viewed only by Quebecers: An official party spokesman prattling away to the camera while wearing a rhinoceros mask.

Not clear

Other elements of the impending election, such as the identity of the next Prime Minister, and whether he will govern with a majority or a minority, are a shade more difficult to deal with.

If you believe the polls, Pierre Elliott Trudeau soon will be back as prime minister. He then will stay on for however long it was he meant he would stay on when he said he would leave "well before the next election." Any guess between five months and five years could be correct.

The various polls — Gallup, Liberal pollster Martin Goldfarb, the Carleton University School of Journalism — all give the Liberals a lead of at least 15 percentage points. This ought to be more than enough for a victory, and quite possibly enough for a majority. In no previous election has any party managed to close a gap of more than eight percentage points.

As well, Trudeau is in fine form, as he always is when he is attacking his opponent (Robert Stanfield in 1974, for example), rather than trying to sell his own ideas (1972, when he almost lost; 1979, when he did).

Lastly, the Liberals are offering Canadians what they want — jam today (lower oil prices and taxes). The only politician in our history to tell us we couldn't have jam — Stanfield with his wage and price controls policy in 1974 — got squashed.

On past form, therefore, this election is done before it is even begun. One woman reader has suggested that to save expense and bother, the election should be limited to Southern Ontario and in B.C., the only regions where voters actually are liable to change their minds.

If only for the sake of national unity, a coast-to-coast election still may be useful. As well, even in Southern Ontario and in B.C., the changes prefigured in the polls — widespread Liberal gains, and a few NDP ones — may not happen.

For the polls to be proved wrong, Canadians will have to undergo the same transformation in their attitudes as has happened recently to Americans. There, until each actually began to campaign, Senator Edward Kennedy seemed a certain winner, and President Jimmy Carter a certain loser. Here, the potential for such a transformation does exist: Pollsters all agree that voters are "highly volatile."

It will be far harder for Joe Clark to change the public's attitude toward him than it was for Carter. First, and by far the foremost, Clark is crippled by his TV image. In these days of tele-politics, image is just about synonymous with political reality. Secondly, he's handicapped by his jam-tomorrow budget.

Yet Clark doesn't lack assets. The Conservatives are the best-organized of the three parties. For Canadians actually to get out and vote in mid-February, or to get them back from Florida in order to do it, will take organization as much as inspiration.

Clark's latest policy on PetroCanada has laid to rest the most damaging of the issues against him, (to the discomfort of the New Democrats), though at the cost of laying him open to the accusation of a "flip-flop" (to the delight of the Liberals).

By happenstance, the campaign will unfold in a way that will put Clark in the position where he most needs to be — in the spotlight. While Clark will be upfront on his own, Trudeau will be hanging back amid the new, instant, Liberal Team, in the middle of which there's a large hole where former Finance Minister Donald Macdonald was supposed to have been.

A public sense of "fair play" may tilt voter sentiment towards Clark, who had just begun to learn his job after only six months at it. More probable, and much more decisive if it happens, Clark may be able to disprove his image as a weak leader by the reality of his tough budget.

NDP slipping

As for the NDP, they seemed to have a hot hand a few weeks ago, but suddenly have begun to feel a draught. The NDP could be squeezed by the pressure to elect a majority government. According to the polls, this squeeze is on already: The NDP only do well when the Liberals are doing badly.

My prediction, therefore? Trudeau. And quite easily.

Two key qualifiers. First, voters really are "volatile" so they could settle down almost anywhere in six weeks time. Second, although most elections are won and lost long before they are held, despite all the media hype during them, the campaigns this time really will make a difference, so that almost any result still is possible.

Questions remain

I was pleased that from Dr. A. A. Larsen of the ministry of health corrected certain statements of mine regarding the fact that my wife and I have been required to pay for our influenza vaccine in both 1978 and 1979.

The information given by Dr. Larsen may help in clarifying what I believe to be an unfortunate situation. I hope so; but there are still important points to be explained and definite questions to be answered.

For many years, on the urgent advice of the doctor who knew us longest and best, my wife and I have taken influenza shots as early in the fall as the vaccine was available. Also, on his advice, my wife has taken a second shot later, in the winter. With the arrival of the first Pharmacare cards we were able to get the vaccine free. The year of the swine-flu scare we received our shots at the Saanich Municipal Health Unit, also without charge.

In early September, 1978, we called the Health Unit to find out whether it had vaccine available. As the reply was "no", we contacted our doctor. He also had none; but a check with a nearby pharmacy indicated that it had the new vaccine on hand; so we were sent there to get it. What a shock it was to learn that we could no longer obtain it with our Pharmacare cards! We had to pay the full cost. Later, in the [illegible] went to our municipal health unit for my wife's customary second shot to carry her through until fall. Again we had to obtain the vaccine at a pharmacy, and pay for it. In the fall of 1979 we went to our doctor for our shots, and were sent once more to the pharmacy to purchase the vaccine.

Since, for the last three years, as Dr. Larsen states, "the B.C. Ministry of Health has provided influena vaccine, at no cost to the recipient, to everyone over 65 years of age", and that it is "provided free of charge to all practising physicians," why is it that our doctor and our municipal health unit both have sent us to a pharmacy to obtain the vaccine at our own expense? Did we go to the wrong doctor and to the wrong health unit? Has a study ever been made to determine how many in the over 65 group have been paying for their own vaccine, or have not been receiving the shots? — James C. Murphy, 749 Claremont Avenue.

Not for Canada

About the Trident airplane being built at Pat Bay airport.

By the look of things from an overall basis, it's time we had a good look at the Canadian aircraft manufacturing industry. Back East government funds have been used to construct two major aircraft at de Havilland and old Canadair both of which are of a size and passenger capacity and usage pattern which make them difficult to sell. One is an executive jet, a big one. Now how many Canadians want one of them? De Havilland might have a good airplane with the Dash 7 but again it's up against exceedingly good lower-priced competition. And, again, is there a real need for Dash 7 here? Air Canada and Canadian Pacific don't have a use for them. The twin-engined Foker is far better value if we want some.

Why are we building airplanes unsuited for real Canadian usage? Trident is also in this class.

They say they can sell Trident but I don't believe them. Why don't they make a standard normal float/wheels plane? Why don't they copy the immense success that Douglas Canada made doing subcontract work building wings and tails for DC9 and DC10 wings? May we have some comments from Canadian pilots please. — Ken Branegan, 319 Chester Ave.

Christmas boil

Christmas Spirit indeed! Your article in the Dec. 22 issue of the Times regarding Mrs. McCarthy spending $4,000 of taxpayer's money to send fancy Christmas cards to each of her Ministry's 5,000 employees raised every last hackle on the back of my neck that was not already bristling from other recent Socred deeds.

To think how many needy families could have had their Christmas Day brightened by the $4,000 makes me boil — but then, like the lady said, we could all send our 82 cents to our favorite charity! — V. A. Preto, 6393 West Saanich Road.

French fight losing battle to save their language

By ROBYN SMYTH

PARIS — The most successful British export ever — the English language — is making deeper and deeper inroads into the French-speaking world.

The alarm is sounded in a series of articles in Le Monde last month, which finds the French tongue in a state of siege in most of its traditional bastions round the world and taking increasing punishment in France itself.

"The dejected mood of the French nation is now attacking the language which is the very substance of its genius," warns Le Monde writer Roger Cans. "Beware! If the Franch language recedes, all we who speak it are threatened in our identity and in our being."

Henri Gobard, a lecturer at Vincennes University, says in a recent book, La Guerre Culturelle, that France is only one of a number of societies fighting for the survival of their cultural identity against the steam-roller of Anglo-Saxon uniformity.

For the most combative of the defenders of the Franch language, the struggle against English is more than a battle of words. In their view, English words are the outriders of American dominance and the salesmen of U.S. exports. They believe that English is being funnelled deliberately into the Common Market through Britain to weaken Europe's prospects of becoming an independent centre of decision between the super-Powers.

The president of one of the French organizations set up to defend the language, Jean-Pierre Van Deth of CIREEL, told Le Monde: "For 30 years the British and Americans have been pursuing, in Europe and the rest of the world, a co-ordinated policy of infiltration. All means are used to instal the English language everywhere."

Accusations of "cultural surrender" are directed by Gaullists and their allies at President Giscard D'Estaing and his policy of mondialisme; a determination to open France fully to the currents of international competition.

Giscard, who has made English the summit language of Europe by using it in his conversations with Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, stunned his critics the other day by saying that in the year 2000 only 1 per cent of the world's population would be French citizens, and 99 per cent would not speak French. Thus, apparently inadvertently, he forecast the eclipse of his language outside France itself — in Belgium, Quebec and former French Africa.

By no means everyone here who regrets the conquering progress of English sees it as the result of a deep-laid plot. Some realize that English, with its gender-less nouns and almost unchanging verbs, widely dispersed across the world and no longer the exclusive possession of any one country, lends itself perfectly to be broken down into a basic international means of communication.

Roger Cans notes that in international gatherings people often prefer to speak English because it is easier to get away with grammatical faults, and one may even be complimented on one's "charming accent". He adds: "French speakers, and especially the French, are always on the watch for the smallest faux-pas."

According to calculations by Le Monde, the French-speaking peoples number about 90 million. Among the international languages they fall well behind the 350 million English, the 200 million Spanish and 120 million Arabs.

In European schools English has taken a good lead over French in West Germany and Italy. In the United States only 15 per cent of high school students study any foreign language. On the other hand, as Le Monde points out, French has done well to maintain itself as the world's second language when there are relatively few people who speak it as their first tongue.

Nearly one-third of the delegates to the United Nations make their speeches in French, and in certain regions, such as the Arab countries, French is actually making progress.

France leads the world in giving the most generous proportion of its university space to foreigners, harboring twice as many foreign students as Britain.

But in France itself French is facing enormous competition in the minds of the younger generation. Le Monde declares that English has become the universal escapist language of teenagers.

"For these young people the language of freedom is no longer French," it says, "but often a kind of broken English that is to be found in strip-cartoons, thrillers, Westerns and pop songs . . . This is perhaps the most disturbing sign of all for the future of French."

Assimilation winning in New England

By E.J. DIONNE Jr.

(Dionne is a reporter for The New York Times who was born in Massachusetts and spoke French before he spoke English.)

FALL RIVER, Mass. — When Albina Roy sat down with his family on Thanksgiving Day here half a century ago, the banter that passed across the table along with the turkey was all in French. Last Thanksgiving, when Mrs. Roy sat down with her daughter and son-in-law and her grandchildren, all the requests for more dressing and cranberry sauce were in English. Not a word of French was spoken, even though everyone at the table was of French-Canadian background.

The decline and disappearance of an immigrant group's native language is as American as pizza, kielbasa and the frankfurter, so Mrs. Roy's tale — which is the story of hundreds of thousands of other French-Canadians — is the same that Italian, Polish or German grandmothers could tell.

The difference is that the decline of the French language among French-Canadians in New England and elsewhere in the United States is taking place at precisely the moment when French-speaking Quebecers in the Parti-Quebecois are using political measures to guarantee the survival of the French language and French culture in the heart of the "English-speaking sea" of North America. Symptomatic of this struggle was the recent award of the 1979 Goncourt Prize, France's most important literary award, to Antonine Maillet, a 49-year-old French-Canadian university lecturer who at the age of 13 had refused to write in English in the schools of New Brunswick.

The basic premise of the language nationalists in the Parti Quebecois is that given the traditional domination of Quebec's economic institutions by English speakers, only firm governmental action will guarantee that French becomes the language not only of the farm and the factory floor, but also of the boardroom and the government office.

But what of the French who have moved beyond the borders of Quebec, and what of their descendants? For the French language, the news is not good. "There's a definite consensus in literature: Francophones outside Quebec are confronted with total and irreversible assimilation," says Jacques Chevalier, assistant professor of anthropology at Carlton University in Ottawa. "The language has definitely declined," says Bernard G. Theroux, a French consular agent here and a leading figure in French-American cultural organizations. Even French organizations, he adds, now hold many of their meetings in English.

Drop in French usage in U.S. has been 'cataclysmic'

Calvin Veltman, an associate professor of sociology at the State University of New York at Plattsburgh, has conducted an elaborate study of language assimilation in the United States for the U.S. federal government's National Centre for Educational Statistics. According to Dr. Veltman, whose survey is based on a sample of 440,000 individuals, two-thirds of the French-Americans 15 years old or over speak only English. In southern New England, an astonishing 95 per cent of French-speakers born in the United States now use mostly English.

The decline has been quite sudden. In a study of French-Canadians in Lewiston, Me., James H. Parker of Long Island University found the drop in the use of the French language has been nothing short of "cataclysmic." in 1960, Dr. Parker sampled conversations in the central business district of Lewiston and found that 50 per cent of the discussions were carried on in French. In 1970 and again in 1973, he conducted a similar study, and found that only 5 to 10 per cent of all conversations were in French.

Why did the French language decline so abruptly? Most observers trace it to a drop in immigration from Quebec, the decline in the influence of the Roman Catholic Church during the 1960's, and the improvement in the economic and social situation of many of the region's French-Canadians.

"It became nonfunctional to speak French when the French population became more upwardly mobile," concluded Dr. Parker in his study of Lewiston. As long as French-Canadians were concentrated in the shoe factories and textile mills, it was easy to maintain tightly-knit French-speaking communities, since it was almost never necessary to speak English. But these factories began to disappear all across New England mill towns, and the French-Canadians sought new — and usually better — jobs in white-collar and service industries. While there are still significant pockets of French-Canadian poverty in New England, the census data suggest the movement of French-Canadians to better jobs in which English became a necessity, and French a luxury.

Charles Castonguay, an associate professor of mathematics at the University of Ottawa, points to two related factors which have led to a decline in French speaking both in the United States and in Canada outside Quebec. One, he says, is "the increased value which is attributed to work and economic success." Whereas these were once subordinated in value to family, church and local community, they have now become paramount. The other is the increased influence of television, which "brings the culture of North American consumer society right into the home."

Curiously, just as the French language has declined in the United States, so has a sense of French-Canadian identity increased. This pattern, common to third- and fourth-generation Americans, was heightened by the rise in ethnic consciousness in the 1960's and 1970's. "Ethnic pride hasn't declined," Theroux contends. "It's so much easier to get people involved in our cultural things." And in northern New England and Louisiana, "French power" and "Cajun power" movements have been born — often to the discomfort of an earlier generation of ethnic leaders.

The growth of separatism in Quebec could play into these new ethnic feelings, some French leaders believe. A more sovereign Quebec, Dr. Castonguay says, could have an impact on the French-Canadian diaspora sim[illegible] to the effect that Israel had for Jews around the world. "There is now a country, a homeland. This has changed the Jewish identity and sort of territorialized it," he contends. "The same is happening with Quebec."

U.S. turns its back on foreign tongues

THE ECONOMIST

WASHINGTON — The learning of foreign languages in the United States, never strong, has dropped to a level that is damaging international trade and diplomacy. That was the finding of the president's commission on foreign languages and international studies, which recently issued its report.

After a year's study of the nation's high schools and universities, the commission, chaired by James Perkins, found that only 15 per cent of American high-school students are studying a foreign language. In 1965 the proportion was 24 per cent. Only one in 20 of those students taking a foreign language course studies it for more than two years.

In the mid-1960s, federal money under the National Defence Education Act helped to encourage the learning of foreign languages. Since then, interest in foreign language study has waned. This has damaged America's edge in commerce abroad and contributed, the commission says, to the country's "repeated unpreparedness" for events overseas.

Private and federal money for international studies has in large part dried up. The Ford Foundation provided about $27 million a year between 1960 and 1967 for advanced training and research in international affairs. It now gives a mere $4 million. Federal support for study centres and the Fulbright exchange program have been severely hurt by a decade of inflation. Similar fellowships dropped from a peak of 2,557 in 1969 to 828 in 1978.

The report calls American incompetence in foreign languages "scandalous" and complains of high schools that produce children whose "knowledge and vision stops at the American shoreline." Indeed, the lack of general competence led the foreign service to drop some years ago the requirement that recruits should have a foreign language.

One of the commission's members was the Illinois Democrat, Representative Paul Simon. It was his insistence that led to the commission's study. For years after the Americans became involved in the Vietnam war, he says, they had to rely on French experts and information because of the lack of American-born university specialists on Vietnam, Laos, or Cambodia. In Taiwan Pepsi Cola executives, it is said, failed to realize that their slogan "Come Alive with Pepsi" had been translated as "Pepsi brings your ancestors back from the grave."

Money is the commission's basic recipe for change. It proposes spending some $178 million to encourage the learning of other languages and to promote international studies. Among 130 particular recommendations, the commission stresses the need for colleges and universities to bring back foreign language requirements. It suggests that 20 international high schools should be set up, supplementing ordinary high schools with language and international affairs courses. The commission also proposes establishing 125 national and regional study centres, preferably grafted on to existing bodies. These could concentrate on a part of the world or on a common international problem such as pollution or hunger. Convinced that children must be started young, the commission urges that elementary schools should take part.

It is an ambitious program, to be sure, but the costs to business of neglecting foreign languages are also high. About three quarters of all business-school graduates with higher degrees have taken no course in international studies. Business schools, the report recommends, should make knowledge of a foreign language a requirement. Language learning can no longer be thought of as a frill, thinks Simon, when one in eight jobs in industry and one in five in farming depend on foreign trade.

It's tough to be mean

Russell Baker

In this television commercial Mean Joe Greene, who is a football player, is limping into the locker room looking bruised, sullen and mean enough to kick the stuffing out of a teddy bear, and he is accosted by a male moppet extending a bottle of carbonated water. Mean Joe scowls at the intruding little busybody and limps on, then suffers a change of heart, turns back, takes the proffered bottle and gives the tyke the biggest, sweetest smile you ever saw in your life.

Do you get the message? Mean Joe Greene isn't mean at all. Beneath that mean exterior lurks just another pussycat waiting for tiny tots to make him purr with soda pop.

I know nothing about Mean Joe Greene except that he plays professional football for the Pittsburgh Steelers and is always called Mean Joe Greene. I like the idea behind that name and am disappointed to discover that it is misleading, that Joe Greene is soft on little tykes, soft as goose down on soda pop. I'm also disappointed when the kid answers Joe's smile with a smile of his own, instead of bursting into tears at the sight of Joe's happily flashing incisors and crying, "Say it ain't so, Joe."

But the kid doesn't cry. He smiles. He is happy to discover that in Mean Joe there is no real meanness. The kid is on his way to becoming a confirmed believer in the modern creed that there is no such thing as a mean man. Twenty or 30 years from now that kid will sit on juries that give not-guilty verdicts to people who shoot their wives and four children because somebody left the cap off the toothpaste tube.

As I say, I know nothing about Mean Joe Greene. Maybe he never had an ounce of decent meanness in him. Maybe the name was just another one of those publicity frauds so common in professional sports. The point is that American youth needs models of human meanness just as much as it needs heroes. For a famous mean man to get caught smiling at moppets is just as bad as for a hero to get caught swindling widows and orphans.

A great deal is made nowadays about the lack of heroes, and what a pity it is, and how everybody, as a result, is going to grow up and get rich by swindling widows and orphans. But the lack of mean men has effects just as evil on society.

Until very recently it was widely thought, on the basis of overwhelming evidence, that the world contained a certain percentage of people who were just downright mean, almost no good at all and likely to behave, given half a chance, like rotten human beings. Being aware of the probability, you kept an eye out for such customers, gave them a wide berth whenever possible, just as you would skirt a viper, and, if compelled to deal with them, kept your dagger unsheathed.

Nowadays, however, the meanest of people find it almost impossible to commit any act of redeeming social vileness. A policeman who shoots an unarmed boy is not allowed to become a useful symbol of that public menace, the rotten cop; instead he is declared mentally ailing and tucked away among psychiatrists. Parents who maim their small children are not allowed to be flogged in public, but are turned over to social workers to find out what's troubling them.

Even when someone like the late Gary Gilmore succeeds in getting himself executed as a model of unmitigated meanness, he is frustrated by social diagnosticians insistent on finding out how society wrought such dreadful perversities in such a commonplace lad.

It is enough to make a genuinely mean man give up in despair. How can he ever commit a deed exemplary enough to caution youth about the dark side of human nature when his most revolting cruelties are belittled by psychiatrists as the work of a humdrum psychosis? When sociologists deny him credit for his own cussedness and award it, instead, to society? When lawyers diminish his capacity for bestiality by reducing courtrooms to tears with testimony about the anguish he has suffered on life's harsh road?

Americans seem determined to abolish the mean man in spite of himself. The ancient saw that there is a little bit of goodness in everybody has been distorted. Nowadays it is: There's no real meanness in anybody.

Club helps baby room

The enjoyment of a lot of people in a community club has been translated into cash that will help pay for a refurbished labor-delivery room at Victoria General Hospital.

Medical director Dr. Don Carlow was informed this week the Strawberry Vale and District Community Club responded to the hospital's appeal for funds and will donate $4,000.

Together with the $6,000 from the province, the money will pay for the work.

Club president Jack Holdridge said club members were particularly pleased to help because 1979 was the International Year of the Child.

Unlike the usual antiseptic, characterless environment of a hospital delivery room, the new labor-delivery room will be decorated and furnished like a home.

The room will allow pregnant women to give birth in more relaxed surroundings and with greater family involvement.

The room will also give the VGH obstetrical staff experience with the relatively new concept, which is to be a major feature at the hospital's new Helmcken Road location, expected to be in operation by mid-1982.

Plans for the new hospital call for seven labor-delivery rooms to provide obstetric service to the area.

The Strawberry Vale and district community club was formed in 1948 to help the needy through the enjoyment of people in the area.

Curtis sees revenue boost

Finance Minister Hugh Curtis expects provincial revenue-sharing with municipalities to be significantly higher in 1980.

Replying to Greater Victoria school board's criticism of this year's basic education tax rate, Curtis said Wednesday he is not yet in a position to say how much municipalities will benefit from revenue-sharing in the new fiscal year.

Nor could he announce any increase in the home owner grant.

But he said the school board gave only part of the picture in objecting to the higher basic education rate, giveing "an unfortunately incomplete indicator to the public we are elected to serve."

Curtis said there is every indication provincial revenue-sharing will be up significantly for the tax year.

He said even though it is too early to be specific, the final tax notice to each property owner reflects all components of provincial aid to local government.

Board chairman Carol Pickup wrote to Education Minister Brian Smith to complain of the 1980 basic levy, which has been progressively larger since 1975, resulting in a steadily rising obligation for local property owners, and a smaller share paid by the province.

Curtis said he hopes the board would accept his observations even though the protest was directed to Smith who has not yet replied.

Feds probe Thomson FP bid

OTTAWA (CP) — Federal combines officials have launched a preliminary study of the $139 million bid made Wednesday by Thomson Newspapers Ltd. for another newspaper chain, FP Publications Ltd.

Robert Bertrand, director of investigations for competition policy, said today the proposed takeover, the latest and richest of three offers for the chain of eight daily newspapers, "may raise some competition issues."

The preliminary fact-finding stage is always carried out by the combines branch as a prelude to a formal inquiry to determine if a takeover is detrimental to the public interest.

The Thomson newspaper group's bid is $20 million higher than one submitted last week by Conrad Black, chairman of Argus Corp. Ltd., and $30 million higher than a bid made by R. Howard Webster of Montreal.

Thomson publishes 49 newspapers in Canada and 70 in the United States, as well as newspapers in the United Kingdom, including The Times and Sunday Times of London.

In British Columbia, the Thomson network owns the Kamloops Daily Sentinel, the Kelowna Daily Courier, the Nanaimo Free Press, the Penticton Herald, and the Vernon Daily News.

Thomson also holds retail ventures, such as The Bay and Simpsons department stores.

The company is offering $4,000 a share for Class A or voting shares, and $62.50 a share for Class B or equity shares.

Black, meanwhile, is offering $5,000 a share for the voting stock but $52 for each of the equity shares.

Both offers expire Jan. 11, but Thomson's bid may be extended beyond that date at its option.

Behind Black as partners in his offer are John Bassett, chairman of Baton Broadcasting Inc., Frederik Eaton, chairman of T. Eaton Co., and George Gardiner, president of the investment firm Gardiner Watson Ltd.

Black is also chairman of Sterling Newspapers Ltd., a Vancouver-based group of small daily and weekly newspapers.

FP publishes eight daily newspapers in Canada, including The Victoria Times and Victoria Daily Colonist, and has extensive printing interests.

Richard Snead of Winnipeg, lawyer for the John Sifton estate, which owns about 22 per cent of FP voting stock, said in a telephone interview the family will meet in Toronto this weekend to discuss the offers.

Snead said he could not comment on the family's reaction until after the meeting, originally set up to discuss the offer by Black's group.

Both FP president George Currie and R. S. Malone, who controls 7.5 per cent of the votes and holds the balance of power on the FP board, declined comment.

Black was not available for comment, but Bassett, former publisher of the defunct Toronto Telegram, said it would be ridiculous to get into a bidding match with Kenneth Thomson, chairman and chief executive officer of Thomson, and his organization.

"All I'm going to do is congratulate Mr. Thomson," Bassett said in an interview. "He's a lot richer than we are."

Bassett said he has discussed the issue with Gardner: "As far as Mr. Bassett and Mr. Gardiner are concerned, we are not prepared to pay more. We felt the bid we made was ample."

If successful in its bid, Thomson would increase its total circulation by almost 50 per cent to 2.4 million from 1.6 million, even though it would only be adding eight papers.

In addition to the Times and Colonist, FP publishes the Globe and Mail, Ottawa Journal, the Calgary Albertan, the Lethbridge Herald, the Winnipeg Free Press and the Vancouver Sun.

Brian Slaight, Thomson senior vice-president, said his company decided it could contribute to FP's growth by investing in it.

In 1978, Thomson Newspapers reported a net income of more than $56.55 million.

Operators locked out

TORONTO (CP) — Bell Canada said today it has locked out telephone operators in Chicoutimi, Que., and Huntsville, Ont., who were working to rule.

Most operators in Quebec walked off the job today to protest the lockout. Top officials of the Communications Workers of Canada in Ontario met to consider similar action.

A Bell spokesman said the company decided to lock out the operators because they were taking so long to handle calls.

Gord Bleasdell said Bell decided management staff could do a better job.

He said the company told about 30 operators in Huntsville, about 100 kilometres north of Orillia, not to return to work until Monday.

The lockout in Chicoutimi, about 150 kilometres northeast of Quebec City, was to last one day.

On Wednesday, most operators returned to work, ending a walkout that was supposed to begin Monday but began prematurely during the weekend.

Before news of the lockouts spread, all but about 270 of the 6,900 operators in Ontario and Quebec had returned to work. Operators in Sherbrooke, Que., and the Ontario cities of Sudbury, Oshawa and Port Hope remained out.

$10,000 scar rules out bikini

TORONTO (CP) — A Timmins, Ont., woman who says she is too embarrassed to wear a bikini because of an ugly scar from an operation has been awarded $10,000 in damages against her doctor by the Ontario Supreme Court.

Simone Videto, 35, sued Dr. Alphonsus Kennedy after she went to him for a sterilization operation that she thought would leave small scars that could be hidden by a bikini.

She was left with an unsightly scar after her bowel was perforated and two operations were needed to save her life.

The judge was told the scar upset her husband so much he would not touch her stomach. As a result, Mrs. Videto refused to have sexual relations with him and the couple separated.

Evidence showed that Mrs. Videto was sent home three hours after the operation in March, 1977, and suffered great discomfort but was unable to reach Kennedy until three days later. A subsequent examination revealed the perforation.

Mr. Justice Samuel Grange ruled that Kennedy failed in his duty to advise Mrs. Videto of the risks of the operation. But the judge also ruled that Kennedy, who has since returned to his native Ireland, was not negligent during the operation as Mrs. Videto had charged.

Waldheim fears worst as limousine mobbed

The incident at the cemetery came one day after hostile street demonstrations in Tehran and a report by the Iranian government that it had uncovered a plot to kill him forced curtailment of Waldheim's schedule.

The secretary-general arrived Tuesday under orders from the UN Security Council to seek the release of the U.S. hostages whose captivity now is in the 61st day. He met for three hours with Ghotbzadeh Wednesday, but the foreign minister said a meeting with victims of the shah's secret police was cancelled because a plot to kill him was uncovered.

The public meeting was to have taken place at an old army officers' club in downtown Tehran. More than 1,000 angry demonstrators paraded around the building waiting for him, shouting anti-American slogans, and there were chants of "Marg Bar Waldheim!" (Death to Waldheim).

"As a result of information received, an unknown group with foreign backing had the intention of misusing the demonstrations to carry out their plot against Mr. Waldheim," Ghotbzadeh told Pars, the official Iranian news agency. He gave no details.

Tehran newspapers and government television commentators have been highly critical of Waldheim's official association with the shah while he was in power and have displayed photographs of Waldheim meeting the monarch and kissing the hand of the shah's twin sister when she was representing Iran at the United Nations.

Waldheim and Ghotbzadeh said after their first meeting that their talk focused on Iranian grievances against the shah and the United States. This was in line with the Iranian government's contention that the secretary-general came to Tehran to hear its side of the dispute with the United States, not to negotiate the release of the hostages.

A 700-word foreign ministry communique made no mention of the hostages, but Waldheim said they were discussed.

The militants holding the hostages say they will not be released until the shah returns to Tehran for trial.

Waldheim is due to report to the UN Security Council on Monday.

Carter stalls SALT in retaliation

regulars still loyal to the old Nur Mohammed Taraki regime which pre-dated the Hafizullah Amin regimes toppled in last week's Soviet-engineered coup. The Soviet troops also are being opposed by persons sympathetic to the Moslem cause.

There also were reports advance elements of the invading Russian army had reached the Pakistan border.

In further reaction to the crisis, President Carter has recalled U.S. Ambassador Thomas Watson from Moscow in a gesture of displeasure over the Soviet action.

(Britain is considering recalling its Moscow ambassador, Sir Curtis Keeble, but by press time no decision had yet been made.)

The U.S. has also decided to seek UN condemnation of the Soviet aggression, which has been widely condemned, not least by many Third World countries.

And there were indications Carter would lift the embargo on shipment of military equipment to Pakistan, which some analysts feared would be overrun by the Soviets as part of its current sweep of agression.

Other options reportedly being considered by the administration include a suspension of commercial credits and cultural exchanges with the Soviet Union.

A U.S. union official says rank and file longshoremen may refuse to load American grain bound for the Soviet Union.

The Soviet news agency Tass today said Carter's condemnation of the Soviet action in Afghanistan "breaks all records of hypocrisy," maintaining the Soviets had merely responded to Afghanistan's request for military and economic aid when it sent an estimated 50,000 troops into the country last week.

In the Afghani capital of Kabul, the streets were quiet with only a minimal number of Soviet troops around key installations, a sharp contrast from recent days when Soviet combat troops and tanks patrolled the streets.

Afghan's new leader, Babrak Karmal — widely described as a Societ puppet — appeared on television Wednesday for the first time since the Soviet-backed coup installed him in power last Thursday.

In another development, the Russian ruble has been declared the official currency in Afghanistan, replacing the afghani as legal tender, reports from the Pakistan newspaper Jang and travellers from Kabul said.

They said the ruble was being used in all official and business transactions in Soviet-held cities.

The government also has frozen bank accounts.

The measures are apparently aimed at preventing funds from reaching the tribal insurgents who still control much of the rugged countryside, which is dominated by mountains and deserts.

In Istanbul, a shootout today between Turkish security guards and a group of youths trying to storm the Soviet consulate protesting against the invasion of Afghanistan left one high school student dead and two other persons slightly injured.

Why zap the poor creep? Start a snail ranch

By PAUL MINVIELLE

Ah, remember those great old movies, the ones that revolved around classic horror themes and had names like The Lizard That Ate Tokyo and The Turkey That Trampled Toledo.

Now, lurking in some clever script writer's mind comes — wait for it — The Snail That Snuffed Saanich!

Giving rise to this horrific notion is news from Vancouver's Kitsilano area that a search for the gypsy moth turned up something else — the European brown garden snail.

Some epicures were no doubt delighted, for the European brown snail is a treat in the Old World. But when the little critter isn't bathed in garlic butter and hidden under the alias "escargot," it's a slimy, slithery, sneaky destroyer of vegetable gardens.

If only it ate slugs.

No one is recommending to Kitsilanonians (Kitsilanonites?) that they eat the new arrivals, but no one has warned against it either.

As a matter of fact, there's a Frenchman in California who says it's a crime the way gardeners there poison snails.

"Snails are low in calories, high in protein, rich in minerals," he insists.

"Would you poison the cows?

"Yet," says the tall, freckled, red-haired Frenchman, "Californians spend millions each year poisoning the snails instead of enjoying the escargots (French for snails) as the piece de resistance of any meal."

Picart says California is a snail paradise.

"There are billions of snails crawling all over California — billions of the same snails that are like caviar to my countrymen," Picart says.

A newcomer to Canada, the European brown garden snail has been found in 17 states and it's threatening some orange groves in California.

The word is that 20 European brown garden snails (let's call it the EBGS) were found in one Kitsilano backyard.

John Gold of Agriculture Canada told the Times it's highly likely the pest will be found in other areas of B.C.

Gold says the snail approaches food much like a slug. It's a scavenger that is fond of brassicas — the cabbage and cauliflower family of plants.

"We haven't got a handle on how serious a problem this is," Gold said. "We'd like to say it's of no concern, but we don't know yet."

Uppermost in the minds of some Vancouver Island gardeners is the worry that the EBGS might somehow cross the Strait of Georgia or Juan de Fuca Strait.

If they do come, remember to be organic in your approach to the problem — don't use pesticides, although Gold says there are good slug baits on the market that will zap the crawly creatures.

But chemicals merely make them unfit for human consumption and it's definitely a no-no to eat any snail that might have been snacking on slug bait.

The preamble of the European authority, Larousse Gastronomique, tells us snails were prized as food as far back as Roman times. In fact, it was a Roman named Fulvius Lupinus who discovered the art of fattening snails.

From another book, The Joy of Cooking, we learn the Romans were so addicted to snails they raised them on ranches and fattened them on bay wine and spicy soups.

There was always the risk of poisoning, and it's easy to suspect that Lupinus tested the end result on his slaves before trying his first land gastropod mollusc (that's what a snail is to the scientists).

Says Larousse: "To avoid the risk of poisoning, snails must be deprived of food for some time before they are eaten, for they may have fed on plants harmless to themselves but poisonous to humans."

The Romans wouldn't have appreciated that method of fattening snails.

"Furthermore, it is advisable only to eat operculated snails, that is to say snails which have sealed themselves into their shells to hibernate."

So don't fight it. With the find in Kitsilano, it's only a matter of time before someone follows the lead of Picart who has borrowed an idea from Roman times.

"I came to California in April last year," Picart said. "It was the spring. It was raining in Santa Rosa.

"I could not believe what was happening before my eyes. Everywhere I looked were the same brown-shelled snails we have in southern France.

"Only the snails in southern France are rapidly disappearing. The demand for snails is so big we have almost completely run out.

"France is now importing snails from Turkey, Romania, Yugoslavia and Greece."

He discovered no one was harvesting the snails commercially as a food item in the U.S. That's how F. Picart Snails came to be. He now has a large snail ranch in his backyard in Santa Rosa.

History does repeat itself, doesn't it?

"I hire people to harvest snails from lawns and farms for miles around Santa Rosa. I pay homeowner and farmers 10 to 25 cents a pound for their snails," Picart explained.

Picart has millions of snails in row after row of large boxes in his backyard.

He fattens them and cleans out their systems at the same time by feeding them cabbage and cornmeal.

Picart packages six snails frozen in garlic butter in a ceramic dish with recesses for the escargots. The dish is placed in the oven and, oo-la-la, the piece de resistance.

Already F. Picart Snails are being sold in supermarkets and specialty shops up and down the Pacific Coast from Alaska to California and as far inland as Denver.

"Maybe I will become the snail king of America," he mused.

But what if people should heed his advice and dine on the snails in their backyard?

"It will be fine for my business. Californians will grow to like the snails. After they eat all the snails in their backyards, they will begin to buy the F. Picart Snails in their supermarket," said the Frenchman.

But he warns: "Never eat the snails from your yard until at least six weeks after the poisons have been last used for snail control. And never eat any snails until you have purged their systems for at least 72 hours by feeding them cornmeal."

Mrs. Shirley Colquhoun won't have to visit the imported food section of stores if the European brown garden snail starts invading back yards.

Marina proposal attacked

A proposal to to build a boat marina in Cordova Bay was attacked today by Ald. Sandy Noel of Saanich.

He said construction of a breakwater and marina is an unwelcome intrusion for residents.

"They don't want to look out of their house and see masts and boats blocking their ocean view," he said.

Saanich engineering department has hired a Victoria consulting firm to do an $8,000 environmental study on the concept of a man-made peninsula of five to 15 acres.

The park would be an ongoing project built with municipal fill on part of the Cordova Bay waterfront between Cowichan Head and Cormorant Point. Exact location hasn't been determined.

A questionnaire sent to 600 Saanich residents by Thurber Consultants Ltd., the company conducting the study, suggests a marina and boat launch as one possible use for the marine park.

But Mayor Mel Couvelier said today a boat marina is the most important part of a proposal.

If the marina concept of the multi-use park is unworkable, its likely the idea will be scrapped, he said.

Income from the boat marina would finance development of the rest of the park and the scheme wouldn't be practical without it, he said.

Couvelier compared the proposal to Oak Bay Marina.

However, Noel said there are few good fishing areas along the exposed Cordova Bay shoreline.

"You have to be close to the popular fishing spots, and Sidney Island is about the nearest one," Noel commented.

He said a marina would create traffic and parking problems.

Municial engineer Cliff Warren wants a place to dump the municipality's fill and a breakwater would be an ideal spot, Noel said.

A spokesman for Thurber said the park concept is designed to kill two birds with one stone — find a disposal site for municipal fill and create a recreation area for residents.

The preliminary study will take into account the biological impact, economic and engineering feasibility of the project and should be ready by the end of the month.

About 20 questionnaires have already been returned, most of them negative replies from Cordova Bay residents, according to the spokesman, who said residents have been calling the consulting firm to express disapproval.

Cordova Bay Community Association president Eric Robinson said the association is thinking about calling a public meeting to discuss the proposal.

Blaze set in trailer

City firemen spent nearly two hours early today extinguishing a stubborn fire in some bundles of paper on a tractor trailer parked behind Allen Paper at Wilson and Tyee.

Only about $300 damage was done in the 4 a.m. fire which officials believe was deliberately set.

City bucks upswing in crime

In Victoria and Saanich the rate has declined while in most other areas of the province there has been as much crime or slightly more than last year.

Victoria's number of Criminal Code offences reported to the end of November was 9.3 per cent lower than the 1978 tally.

That's about 1,000 criminal offences less than the previous year and is the most significant drop since 1965 when the city police records section was formed.

Saanich, too, reported a drop of about four per cent in crime to the end of October.

Provincially the trend has been to slight increases. The B.C. Police Commission says the rate was up 1.7 per cent to the end of October.

There was less crime in Victoria in all categories except sex offences and frauds.

Ask the Times

Q: I've noticed these Duffy's cabs running around Victoria. Is there any connection with a large fleet of the same name in Winnipeg? J.E.K.

A. Yes, but only in name. The three owner-operators involved in the local operation came from Winnipeg where they were among the 80 or so owners of the large Duffy's fleet. They decided to use the name here when they established their cab company in the fall of 1978.

Old Legion branch going to auction for back taxes

The old Britannia Legion building at 1616 Blanshard Street goes up for sale at auction next Wednesday to pay $10,315.20 in 1978 property taxes owed by Garden City Developments Ltd.

City solicitor Jakob de Villiers last month obtained an order in B.C. Supreme Court forcing the sale to recover the back taxes. The sheriff will conduct an unreserved auction next week on the property.

Last year, its assessed market value was $465,550.

The city has also filed a writ in the Supreme Court to recover 1979 property taxes totalling $67,886.65 owed by the bankrupt Abacus Cities Ltd. on two Fort Street properties.

De Villiers is asking for a declaration by the court that although the Alberta-based land development company is in receivership under Thorne Riddell Inc., the city has a prior right to the back taxes and can proceed with a forced sale under the Municipal Act to recover them.

One of the Abacus properties — 990 Fort, occupied by the Federal Business Development Bank — was assessed last year at $1,026,000 and the other at 1964 Fort, which houses medical offices and a bank, was valued at $1,646,250.

Fort Victoria Properties Ltd., an Abacus subsidiary through which it owns the Market Square shopping development in downtown Victoria, has paid an instalment of $25,000 on back taxes of $79,685.13 which eliminates the need to enforce a court order for payment the city obtained last year.

Under a tough new policy initiated last fall, the city began prosecuting property owners more than $2,000 in arrears on the current year's taxes as of Oct. 1.

Howie makes it, now works his thumb

Al Howie has done it again.

This one was a 200-kilometre effort to Port Alberni.

He left Victoria at 10 a.m. Wednesday and arrived at 8:15 a.m. today after two stops in between — at Duncan and Nanaimo.

He doesn't know if his achievement is a record but will check with Guinness Book of Records people just in case.

Howie, who made the run as a personal challenge, won't know how much money he raised until next week when all the pledges come in.

Meanwhile, Howie plans to hitch-hike back to Victoria later today to return to his job-hunting. He's an unemployed stonemason.

WCB appeal system hit

Victoria labor official Jack Scott says the Workers' Compensation Board is discriminating against non-union workers.

He said regulations should be changed so that all workers are treated equally.

Scott, business agent for the Painters' Union, criticized the requirement that claimants must get union support before they can appeal decisions made by the board of review.

Scott said that considering more than half of the work force in B.C. is non-unionized, the requirement doesn't make much sense.

The act says that in cases where the board of review makes a unanimous decision, the claimant can appeal to the next higher body — the board of commissioners — but only if he has support of an organized group of workers or employers.

Lawyer Maria Giardini, a compensation consultant, also feels the requirement is unnecessary.

"What it does is make it more difficult for non-union persons and small employers to pursue that avenue of appeal," she said.

Giardini said there were at least half a dozen cases in 1979 where claimants had to go to a union and ask for support before the commissioners would accept their appeals.

"That's discrimination," Scott said.

"Here we have the labor ministry of a free enterprise government refusing to allow persons to take their cases to the board of commissioners unless they are affiliated with a union."

A WCB spokesman said the requirement was incorporated into the act on July 1, 1974.

He said the intent was to block workers or employers from appealing decisions without sufficient grounds.

Signs: 'Sense of honor'

The city of Victoria is washing its hands of any intramural conflicts between local representatives of the federal political parties on placement of election placards and signs.

City solicitor Jakob de Villiers said Wednesday the Supreme Court of Canada recently declared invalid an Ontario municipal bylaw which banned election signs entirely. The court said municipalities had no power to regulate election signs.

However, it doesn't mean the politicians can put up their signs anywhere they like or on city property, he said.

In the past Victoria has tried to take some action against political parties which erected signs on city property, but at every election city hall has been bombarded with calls from partisans complaining about alleged special treatment given to members of an opposing party.

"Every election since I've been here I've had phone calls from someone in Party A accusing us of giving preferential treatment to Party B and someone from Party B will call and say we're giving special treatment to Party A," he said.

"I've frequently been accused of being in bed with the other political party."

This time, said de Villiers, the city will refuse to act on such complaints, citing the high court ruling on election signs.

"We will leave it entirely to their sense of honor," he said.

However, the city reserves the right on its own to remove signs which blatantly offend.

De Villiers wouldn't specify circumstances, but it seems likely any candidate with ideas of staking out the entrances to Beacon Hill park, for example, should dismiss the thought.

Opening lead — five of clubs.

Sylvia often had trouble counting correctly to 13. This was not particularly surprising to the other members of the club, since nearly all of her thinking at the bridge table was marked by peculiarities and aberrations of a totally unexpected kind.

Sylvia simply couldn't contend with all the varied problems of the game with what might be called orderly thinking. Probably all her thought processes — regardless of how fantastic they appeared to others — seemed to her entirely logical, and she could seldom convince either her tormented partners or her grateful opponents of the sheer logic of her view.

But, as indicated before, even Sylvia's arithmetic sometimes went haywire, though in today's hand it stood her in good stead. Sylvia, as usual, was playing in the expert game and got to six hearts. West led his singleton club and Sylvia took East's nine with the king.

She then led the ace of trumps on which West played the eight, and continued with the king on which West played the nine. Thinking that all the adverse trumps were now gone, Sylvia next led the ace of clubs. West, delighted that his falsecards had deceived Sylvia, ruffed with his six of hearts and shifted to the king of spades.

Sylvia took the spade return with the ace, cashed her ace of diamonds, played the heart four to dummy's five, and discarded her J-9-2 of spades on the K-Q-J of diamonds. As a result, she made the slam!

The story of Sylvia's newest escapade spread like wildfire to the other members of the club. Had Sylvia drawn all three of West's trumps, she would automatically have lost two spade tricks and gone down one! She would also have gone down one if West had not ruffed the ace of clubs!

Tony checked his cash. "A dollar?" he said. "I don't have that much."

"Uh you can surely spare something," Gwen pleaded. "How much do you have?"

Well?

Penguins pull closer to stumbling Habs

Times News Services

Pittsburgh Penguins are challenging Montreal Canadiens for first place in the Norris Division of the National Hockey League and that says something about both their seasons.

Pittsburgh pulled to within one point of Montreal on Wednesday night with a 5-3 win over the defending Stanley Cup champions, who are tied for the divisional lead with Los Angeles. Kings gained a share of the top spot with a 4-2 win over Detroit Red Wings.

The Penguins are off to one of the best starts in their history, while Montreal continues to struggle. The loss was the Canadiens' seventh straight here.

"There's something missing there," Pittsburgh defenceman Ron Stackhouse said following the game. "I don't know what it is. Maybe it's because they had a few guys retire or maybe it's just their year for an off-season."

"There's some little spark missing. They're not the Montreal they used to be, but they're a still a damn fine team."

Penguins coach Johnny Wilson preferred to concentrate on his team's success rather than attempt to assess Montreal's problems.

"I think it's just a matter of the other teams getting better," said Wilson. "We wouldn't quit. We kept bouncing back."

Penguins led three times and saw Montreal rebound to tie it on each occasion.

Pittsburgh went ahead to stay in the final period when Dale Tallon scored his first goal of the season and Ross Lonsberry hit the open net with 28 seconds left to seal the victory.

Tallon returned to the Pittsburgh lineup just a week ago after being sidelined last March 13 with a broken leg and then playing with the Canada Selects at the Izvestia tournament last month in Moscow.

Rod Schutt scored two goals for Pittsburgh and Pat Hughes added another. Both are former Canadiens farmhands who were acquired in trades. Pierre Mondou scored twice for Montreal and Steve Shutt was credited with a goal when Pittsburgh goalie Greg Millen accidentally knocked the puck into his own net.

But even gifts aren't helping the Canadiens.

"We're struggling, but this was our best game on the road," said Montreal coach Claude Ruel. "I'm proud of the way we played tonight. We gave 60 minutes of hockey."

The coach said both teams were fired up.

North Stars, with the second-best home-ice record in the league, ran their Met Centre mark to 14-1-2 Wednesday night with a 2-1 win over Boston Bruins.

Only the amazing Flyers, with an unbeaten 15-0-5 record at the Spectrum, boast a better mark — by eight percentage points (.875 to .867).

In other games, New York Islanders downed Toronto Maple Leafs 3-1, New York Rangers tied Quebec Nordiques 3-3, Chicago Black Hawks whipped Colorado Rockies 5-2 and Hartford Whalers tied Edmonton Oilers, 3-3.

Dynamo turns on Jets

WINNIPEG (CP) — The Moscow Dynamo turned on the juice Wednesday night and short-circuited the Winnipeg Jets of the National Hockey league as they scored a 7-0 win before 14,605 Winnipeg fans.

After the game, Winnipeg assistant coach Billy Sutherland had nothng but praise for the Soviet team.

"They gave us a lesson in," said Sutherland.

"I've never seen a Soviet team play the body as well as they did," Sutherland added. "It was no contest. It looked like they had seven men on the ice all the time."

Dynamo coach Vitali Davidov said his team played its finest game since starting its North American tour.

The Soviet team swarmed over the Jets, using speed, precision and body contact to the best advantage and outshooting the Jets 41-18. Dynamo posted its first win in five games.

McIlhargey returned to Philly by Canucks

VANCOUVER (CP) — Defenceman Jack McIlhargey, who came to the Vancouver Canucks of the National Hockey League almost three years ago, was traded back to his old team Wednesday.

McIlhargey, who played in 24 games with the Canucks this season, goes to the Philadelphia Flyers for cash and future considerations.

He had two assists and 41 minutes in penalties with the Canucks this year.

McIlhargey came to the Canucks from the Flyers along with defenceman Larry Goodenough in a Jan. 20, 1977, trade which sent defenceman Bob Dailey to the Flyers.

Savard out two weeks

MONTREAL (CP) — Defenceman Serge Savard will be lost to Montreal Canadiens for at least two weeks after fracturing a small bone in his right foot, the National Hockey League team announced Wednesday.

Landry, Coryell to coach

NEW YORK (AP) — Tom Landry of the National Conference's Dallas Cowboys and Don Coryell of the American Conference's San Diego Chargers will be coaches of the National Football League's Pro Bowl all-star game in Honolulu on Jan. 27.

Landry, whose Cowboys were beaten by Los Angeles Rams in last Sunday's NFC semi-final, is making his third Pro Bowl coaching appearance. It is the first time for Coryell, a former football coach at the University of British Columbia whose Chargers lost last Saturday's AFC semi-final to Houston Oilers.

Coach honored

BRANDON (CP) — Dunc McCallum, coach of the Western Hockey League's Brandon Wheat Kings, has been named Western Manitoba sportsman-of-the-year for 1979 by the Brandon Sun.

Cats facing classy clubs

Victoria Cougars will face two high-class Western Hockey League opponents tonight and Saturday at Memorial Arena.

Calgary Wranglers, who lead the Eastern Division with an impressive 2-6-0 record, form the opposition tonight at 8 while the Portland Winter Hawks, who picked up a 10th consecutive victory and moved to within six points of Western Division-leading Victoria on Wednesday, will face Cougars at 8:30 p.m. Saturday.

Wranglers are only two points behind Victoria in the over-all standings but enjoy a definite advantage of four games in hand. The Calgary club is now eight points ahead of Regina Pats, who tripped Brandon Wheat Kings 6-4 in the only other game Wednesday.

Tim Tookey scored a power-play goal in the third period to spark the Winter Hawks and help establish a new club record for consecutive wins.

Portland led 2-1 after one period on goals by Gary Yaremchuk and Ed Cooper. Dean Postlewaite was the lone Seattle marksman in the first 20 minutes.

The Winter Hawks increased their lead to 3-1 when Florent Robidoux scored at 3:35 of the second period. However, Seattle bounced back with goals by Joe Ward and Tom Stanger to tie it at 3-3 after 40 minutes.

Referee Rob Shick disallowed power-play goals by Tookey and Portland's Jim Dobson in the second period, but Tookey came back to fire the winner at 10:06 of the third period.

Pats scored four goals in a penalty-filled third period Wednesday night to pull out a home-ice victory.

Ball signs with Caps

VANCOUVER (CP) — Vancouver Whitecaps have signed midfielder Alan Ball, the catalyst of their North American Soccer League championship team, to a one-year contract.

The veteran free agent joined the Whitecaps at mid-season last year in a straight cash deal with Philadelphia Fury, and scored eight goals and 10 assists in 15 games.

Ball, 34, added seven assists in seven playoff games, setting up the winning goal in the Whitecaps 2-1 win over Tampa Bay Rowdies in the Soccer Bowl final.

One line sparks Maple Leaf romp

League-leading Esquimalt Maple Leafs rampaged to a 15-1 victory over PPCLI Pats in a South Island Big Six Hockey League game Wednesday at Esquimalt Sports Centre.

Riddell scored four goals and had two assists, Parsons had three goals and three assists and Caldwell had a goal and four assists.

Warren Smith also fired three goals for Esquimalt while singles were contributed by Bob Martin, Dennis Fodor, Dennis Sproule and Rob Coldwell.

Mike Duncan scored for Pats.

So what's ahead in '80?

Well, it's 1980 and not much different from old 1979. The weather is fine although it may snow in the upper echelons by the weekend. But fear not — not here. The only blot on the calendar likely will be a light dusting on Feb. 2.

But it won't stay and spring will be on the way.

So that's the weather. What else is ahead?

Plenty, and it could be a banner year all round.

First there are the curling playdowns almost every weekend from now until the end of February. The winners will go on. The losers will regroup and there will probably be an exodus to Calgary that first week in March for the Brier. Winners? Who knows?

However, the University of Victoria Vikings and Vikettes are also playoff bound; and, judging by recent results, theirs could be far more successful quests. Certainly neither team can be faulted for what has gone before in their basketball program and the promise is more of the same ahead.

The Cougars of the Western Hockey League have similar aspirations with the game against Calgary tonight the first bell ringer of the new year and possible indicator of the future.

The Cougars won the last battle of one-upmanship in Calgary and the Wranglers want that one back. And while the Cougars may be favored, that view is biased. The Wranglers are the pick of the prairie contingent, No. 1 in the league on the basis of games played, and are every bit as talented as the men of Jack Shupe.

Meanwhile, the national champion Shamrocks soon will be girding their loins in another venture for the Mann Cup. Some of the players too will be eyeing the World championships to be held here and in Vancouver this summer.

As for the Shamrocks, there may be more trouble ahead than just winning lacrosse games. Club president Fred Wooster isn't yet certain if he will stay on for another term while general manager Leon Hall has indicated he would like to step down because of pressure of business.

The Rocks are also looking for some left-handed shots, especially since Ranjit Dillon said last season that he would retire, while Ivan Thompson, who had such a fine Cup series, is also doubtful at this stage of the year.

In addition, Joe McCrea has indicated that he too will retire. However, McCrea is working in Nanaimo, for coach Larry McNabb of the Timbermen, no less; and while it is apparent he would help the Timbermen if he decides to play again, it is also obvious the Shamrocks won't give him up without something in return.

Or as Wooster said: "The Timbermen have a rookie we would like. He is Tarey Pollock, who would have been our No. 1 draft pick." It should also be realized that Pollock, who played several games for the Irish last year, is a left-hand shot. Otherwise, the Rocks will meet at the executive level in the next few weeks to set their plans in motion.

On the soccer front, Victoria West has been doing better than all right during the winter. They are rolling along nicely before attempting to defend their Canadian championship. And, at the moment, they obviously rate the No. 1 label even if they have lost some of their numbers from last year's championship squad.

Budgets too are always national calibre and, with Bob Burgess back in town plus the fact that recruitment is under way for other help, perhaps some of the veterans who might have been considering retirement will stick around just one more time.

After all, as Pan-Am champs, Budgets figure to wear their colors proudly as they always have.

That's some of it. The rest will come up when due. It always does. And a Happy New Year to you too.

Fall cost Shields Games team spot

A fall in one of his strongest events probably cost Dave Shields of the Esquimalt Speedskating club a berth on the team that will represent Canada in the Winter Olympic Games next month at Lake Placid, N.Y.

Competing in the Canadian Olympic speedskating trials, which ended Monday at Saskatoon, Shields, 21, placed third over-all in senior men's all-around competition and was fourth over-all in sprints.

However, he failed to match the Olympic qualifying time in any of his events and thus was ineligible for selection to the Olympic squad. He was named to the national "B" team.

Shields who missed the qualifying time by only one-tenth of a second in both the 500 and 1,000-metre races, appeared on his way to a qualifying victory in the 5,000-metre contest before falling on the final lap. He finished in fourth place, two seconds off the Olympic standard.

Two other Esquimalt skaters also competed in the trials.

Brenda Shields placed 16th on the junior women's all-around list and was 21st over-all in both the senior all-around and the senior sprints.

Rod Phillips wound up in 21st place in the junior men's all-around, was 26th in the senior men's all-around and 30th in senior sprints.

Ausssie crowd violence scored

SYDNEY, Australia (AP) — Mike Brearley, English cricket captain, said today that crowd violence in Australia was the worst he has seen anywhere, and predicted: "Someone is going to get killed one day."

Brearley said it was getting to the stage where it was downright dangerous to play in Australia.

"You can't go out and field within 15 yards of the boundary," he said. "That is not particularly good for cricket."

Brearley said it was obvious to him that Australians don't like Englishmen, and added it was safer to play in Pakistan, because, he said: "You are protected there by a barrier."

Crimson Tide repeats as No. 1

By The Associated Press

Time marches on, but the Alabama Crimson Tide rolls along in the same place — No.1 in The Associated Press final U.S. college football poll for the second year in a row.

Alabama won the national championship following the bowl games last year, beating Southern California in a hotly disputed vote. This year's balloting, also seriously challenged on the West Coast, finished with Alabama No.1 and Southern Cal again in hot pursuit.

Coach Bear Bryant's Crimson Tide received 43 first-place votes to 20 for Southern Cal from a panel of 67 sports writers and broadcasters Wednesday. Two voters split their ballot between Alabama and Southern Cal, giving the Crimson Tide 46 first-place votes to 21 for the Trojans.

Oklahoma finished third for the second straight year, followed by Ohio State and Houston.

Alabama began New Year's Day in second place, 1½ points behind top-ranked Ohio State and 8½ points ahead of No.3 Southern Cal. But the Crimson Tide, the only major college to finish with a perfect 12-0 record, convincingly beat a pesky Arkansas team, 21-9, in the Sugar Bowl.

Then in the Rose Bowl, Southern Cal, which had a tie with Stanford as the only blemish on its record, squeaked by Ohio State 17-16.

In total points, Alabama received 1,317 out of a possible 1,340, while Southern Cal had 1,289. In contrast to the final regular season poll, when eight voters kept Alabama out of the top three, only two board members had the Tide as low as third this time. It was Alabama's fifth national championship — all under Bryant — since The AP poll began in 1936.

Soviets junior champs Canada finishes fifth

HELSINKI (CP) — The undefeated Soviet Union team came from behind to defeat Sweden 2-1 in the final match of the tournament Wednesday to capture the world junior hockey championship.

The Soviets have won all seven junior global tournaments staged for players 19 years and under.

Finland took the silver medal in the tournament, Sweden got the bronze and Czechoslovakia was fourth.

Finland beat Czechoslovakia 4-2 in its last game.

In the consolation group, Canada was first (3-0) to finish fifth over-all followed by West Germany (2-1) the United States (1-2) and Switzerland (0-3). The U.S. defeated Switzerland 9-5 Wednesday.

Two players each from Finland, Sweden and the Soviet Union were named to the tournament all-star team.

Dunsmuir topples Parkland hoopers

Dunsmuir Demons clipped visiting Parkland Panthers 71-66 in overtime Wednesday in an exhibition high school boys' basketball tussle.

The game, which served as a warm-up exercise, was tied 62-62 at the end of regulation time.

Terry Kurvers led Dunsmuir with 20 points while Guy Hunter was the top gun for Panthers with 14.

Both squads are scheduled to meet the touring Bulleen-Templestowe Club from Australia this weekend at Dunsmuir.

Dunsmuir takes on the visiting squad Friday with the junior boys' playing at 5, the senior girls clashing at 6:30 and the senior boys squaring off at 8 p.m.

Shields not keen on job

Social worker John Shields said today he's not eager to be president of the Victoria Labor Council for a third year but he's willing to be nominated again if the membership wants him.

The B.C. Government Employees Union vice-president asked fellow delegates at the council's first nomination meeting Wednesday night to withhold his name.

"I'm not anxious to run again but I'm not precluding it either," he said today.

"Two years has been a kind of normal cycle for the presidency. It is a fairly demanding job."

Jack Groves, recording secretary of Local 118 of the International Woodworkers of America and president of the labor council some five years ago, was the only candidate nominated for the job. He is first vice-president of the council.

Shields said he is waiting to see who else steps forward for nomination to the executive slate at the council's final nomination session on Jan. 16 before he makes up his mind whether to run.

He said he wants to see a good balance on the executive between the large unions — the BCGEU represents about half of the 19,000 unionists affiliated with the council — and the smaller labor organizations in the region.

Higher political ambitions do not enter into his decision, Shields said.

"I have no interest in running federally at this time."

The former priest, who now works at the Fernwood office of the ministry of human resources, last spring attempted to get the provincial NDP nomination in Victoria. In the November civic elections he ran ninth in the race for the eight aldermanic positions.

If Shields steps down, he will be following former Victoria alderman Larry Ryan, who quit last month after 13 years as secretary-treasurer of the council, the only full-time paid position on the executive.

Ryan took a job as organizer with the Service Employees International Union.

Two candidates stepped forward to take Ryan's post — Sylvia Porter of the BCGEU and Dave Higgins of the International Brotherhood of Boilermakers, Iron Shipbuilders, Blacksmiths, Forgers and Helpers.

John Schibli of the Carpenters union was nominated for Groves' old position of first vice-president.

Groves is also seeking the NDP federal nomination in Esquimalt-Saanich riding, where Saanich teacher and alderman Robert Cameron was the socialist candidate last time.

Gulf loss on fuel for Alta. $6M

VANCOUVER (CP) — A costly solution to a shortage of diesel fuel in southern Alberta arrived at Vancouver on Wednesday in the hold of a Canadian Pacific tanker.

Imported from Venezuela by Gulf Canada Ltd., 230,000 barrels of diesel 30 arrived in the hold of the tanker Fort Edmonton.

Gulf, which is paying $1.50 a gallon for the fuel, will ship it by rail to Calgary where it will be sold for 70 cents a gallon.

The fuel is vital if transport demands for diesel fuel in southern Alberta are to be met this winter, Gulf said.

A Gulf official in Calgary said the company had estimated 1979 demand would increase about six per cent, instead of 15 per cent.

Bennett mum on mutiny rumors

Premier Bill Bennett today refused to comment on reports of growing opposition to his leadership within the Social Credit party.

"I have no response," Bennett said when asked about the movement headed by Al Gates, of Langley, to replace him as leader.

Bennett also said he does not expect the issue to surface Friday at the regular monthly meeting of the party's board of directors in Richmond.

To a suggestion that constituency representatives may have some pointed questions for him at the meeting, Benett shot back: "I might hsve some pointed questions for them."

Gates, a former president of the Langley constutuency association, claims party members in at least four ridings are calling for a review of Bennett's leadership.

He said supporters of a petition calling for a leadership review will have no trouble collecting signatures.

The basis of Gates' attack on the premier is that Bennett should have acted more effectively to nip the dirty tricks affair in the bud.

He says much of the blame for the dirty tricks-letter-gate controversy, rests with Bennett.

"There are a lot of people in almost all ridings who are were very dissatisfied with the way the premier has handled things."

Bennett, meanwhile, says he will probably name his new minister of tourism next week.

His apointment was expected shortly after he was cleared of influence peddling allegations following an RCMP probe.

However, Ritchie went back under a cloud when it was revealed that RCMP and Crown counsel had recommended he be charged.

Associate Deputy Attorney General Neil McDiarmid has said he decided against proceeding with charges because there was not enough evidence for a prima facie case against Ritchie.

Bennett would not discuss Ritchie's cabinet chances today.

"I'm very glad that Mr. Ritchie is free now to proceed and work as an MLA," was his only comment.

The premier also refused to name a date for the opening of the spring legislative session but said an announcement can be expected "as soon as we assess the legislative program and the budget progress."

Vice-premier dies

TOKYO (AP) — North Korean Vice-Premier Ro Tae Ok died Wednesday in a "mishap," the official North Korean news agency reported. He was 60. The report from Pyongyang gave no details of his death.

Constable at fault in death

MONTREAL (CP) — A Quebec provincial police officer has been found criminally responsible in the shooting death of David Cross, an Indian man he was trying to arrest after a high-speed car chase.

Coroner Cyrille Delage made his ruling public today. The affair stirred a wave of protest on the Mohawk reserve in nearby Caughnawaga, where the shooting incident took place last Oct. 20.

Constable Robert Lessard testified at a coroner's hearing that he shot Cross in self-defence when the man began pounding his patrol car with a stick.

But about 100 Indian witnesses said the officer fired after opening the car door, without giving any prior warning.

Before the judge

A third person was charged Wednesday in provincial court with attempted murder in connection with a Dec. 23 assault on a patient in Victoria General Hospital.

Ardiene Elizabeth Langer, 35, of 1027 Colville, appeared before Judge Blake Allan.

She is charged with the attempted murder of Terrence Ray Adams and possession of a piece of pipe dangerous to the public peace.

Charged earlier were William Lloyd Christie, 44, of 623 Raynor, and William Richard Johnson, 34, of 512 Joffre.

Adams suffered multiple cuts to his head, arms, and chest. He was released from hospital last Wednesday.

Langer and Christie were represented by lawyer Douglas Christie while Johnson was represented by Michael O'Connor.

All elected trial by B.C. Supreme Court judge and jury and were remanded until Feb. 4 for a preliminary hearing.

Judge William Ostler fined a 32-year-old Port Moody fisherman $350 and ordered his $3,419.55 salmon catch forfeited for fishing with overlength seine nets.

Crown counsel John Savage said Joseph Domijan was fishing aboard the Bligh Island Sept. 18 near Port Renfrew when his vessel was boarded by fisheries officers.

Savage said the officers measured Domijan's net and found it to be 47 fathoms (282 feet) over the 300-fathom limit set out in the Pacific Coast Salmon Fishing Regulations.

Judge Fred Green imposed fines totalling $450 on a 21-year-old man who pleaded guilty to mischief, causing wilful damage to a police car and assaulting a peace officer.

Archie Glen Goldie, of 231 Helmcken, was also placed on six months probation.

Crown counsel Clinton Kittle said Goldie was arrested June 7 at Thetis Lake Park for an infraction of the Liquor Control and Licencing Act.

While in the custody of Colwood RCMP, Kittle said, Goldie kicked a door and the right rear window of the police car, breaking the glass.

He also kicked Constable Bruce Bowman in the face and attempted to strike Constable Peter Backus.

Fined for drinking-driving offences were: Harold James Ferguson, 45, of 3002 Leigh, $500; Doug Yu Tak Chu, 20, of 1429 Taunton, $450, and Marshall Smith, 60, of 915 Rex, $400.

BCRIC share fraud charged

An Esquimalt man charged with four counts of defrauding the provincial government in connection with B.C. Resources Investment Corp. shares was remanded without plea Wednesday to Jan. 10.

Lawrence Joseph Scott, also known as Lawrence Joseph Hill, of 614 Craigflower, is charged with applying for BCRIC shares at four different institutions.

His appearance in provincial court came as Victoria NDP MLA Charles Barber called for charges to be laid against a Vancouver man who applied at 33 different institutions for five free BCRIC shares.

Finance ministry consultant Bob Hawkins said the unidentified man was caught by a computer cross-checking system.

Hawkins said the man would not be charged but the government had cancelled 32 of the 33 applications and would not tell the man which financial institution held the five free shares he was entitled to.

Barber said the apparent refusal to lay charges is disgraceful and warned: "The refusal to apply the law in this case will encourage breaking of the law in other cases."

He called on Attorney-General Allan Williams to review the matter.

Policemen powerless as knifings increase

VANCOUVER (CP) — Homicide police are concerned about the high frequency of stabbing deaths in Vancouver.

Statistics released Monday show that 14 of 26 homicides in 1979 resulted from stabbings compared with 11 of 27 in 1978. Of the other homicides in 1979, six persons were beaten to death, three died of gunshot wounds, two suffocated and one was drowned.

Sgt. Ken Hale of the major crime section said stabbings account for the most murders every year.

Part of the problem, he said, is that police are powerless when they stop someone on the street carrying a knife on his belt. The knife is not a concealed weapon and police can only issue a warning, he said.

Most people break New Year's resolutions almost as soon as they're made, but U.S. first lady Rosalynn Carter says: "This year I am resolved to pass the Mental Health Systems Act, to ratify the ERA, re-elect the president and do a better job keeping my diary."

A Toronto man who regained sight in one eye through a tiny lens implanted in an operation in Rochester, N.Y., has lost his other eye. Martin Ramsay, 29, was blinded 14 months ago because of a reaction to a combination of penicillin and aspirin he took for an ear infection. On Nov. 27, a miniature telescopic lens was implanted in his right eye but an attempt to do the same to his left eye failed because the eye was too badly damaged and infected.

Suzanne Thomason of Florida thought she was sterilized three years ago when her second son was delivered by Caesarean section. Two years later, she gave birth to twins. The sterilization procedure she authorized during her stay at Orlando Regional Medical Centre was never performed, so Mrs. Thomason, 25, has filed suit against the hospital and her gynecologist, asking that both be forced to help pay for the rearing of her twin boys. "The worst part of the problem is she now has four children, all under the age of 5, when she only wanted two," said her attorney, Nolan Carter.

Dear Abby:

At 16 I married a 21-year-old man I thought I loved. We had a son a year later, but the marriage didn't work out, so we were divorced when the boy was 6. I'm now married to a wonderful man who adopted my son.

Meanwhile, my ex dropped out of sight for three years. Yesterday, out of the blue, he called saying he had something very important to tell me, and would I meet him downtown — alone.

When I met him, I nearly fainted dead away! He was dressed like a woman. He said he was a transsexual who had been living as a woman for two years and was scheduled for a sex change operation next month! He said his name is "Anita" now, and he's in show business. Abby, I couldn't believe my eyes. He had electrolysis to remove his facial hair, took hormones to develop a female figure, and was wearing a wig, makeup, and stylish clothes. He looked like a beautiful woman! This was a great shock to me because he was all man when we were married. Our sex life was normal, and I never dreamed he had these tendencies.

My problem is how to tell our son. Or should I tell him at all? (He's 9 now.) My ex lives in another city and has promised not to come near our son without approval. If the boy ever saw his father as "Anita" he would die, and so would I!

Dear Abby:

I have a mother-in-law who comes to my house and starts cleaning it up, or changing things around, the minute she gets here. If my clothes are in the dryer, she takes them out and folds them. She's always rearranging my cupboards.

If I had a dirty or messy house, that would be a different story.

This really took the cake: She came over and pulled the sheets right off my bed and laundered them! I was never so insulted in all [illegible] change my sheets on Friday, and this was only Sunday!)

I spoke to my husband about her, and he said, "Don't hassle her. She's getting old." (Abby, she's 46.)

Had It

Dear Had It:

To handle such a strong and assertive person, you must be even stronger and more assertive. Let her know in no uncertain terms that when she is in your home, she is a guest — and she's not to do a thing. At 46, she's young enough to learn.

Physiognomy comes to the West

Author faces lives of others

By RUDY MAXA
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Timothy Mar's daughter remembers the first time her father saw the face of Edward Kennedy on television. "Oh," she recalls him saying, "that man is in great physical danger. Look at those eyes."

To Timothy Mar, the face is a road map of life, a veritable Rand McNally atlas that charts tragedy, hope and destiny. Fifty years ago in his homeland of China, Mar learned the art of physiognomy, or face reading, from masters who believed the balance and shape of the face, its proportions, configuration of features, bone structure and coloration reveal the fortune and future of an individual when matched with a person's age.

Mar moved West as a diplomat from pre Second World War China and later became a professor of history and philosophy. Now in his middle 70s, Mar divides his time between New York and Washington, where his wife and daughter live. Paperback rights for his first book that introduced face reading to North America a few years ago were sold for about $90,000. Now he's working on a more detailed description of the practice. He hopes North America's new fascination with China, coupled with a growing awareness of other Oriental practices such as acupuncture, will mean more interest in physiognomy.

"I don't like to work from photographs," says Mar, who explains that black-and-white portraits don't tell him enough about skin texture and color.

But photographs are second best to live subjects, and Mar agreed to comment on the destinies of leading contenders for the U.S. presidency by examining several close-up photos of each man:

Jimmy Carter, 56: "He is primarily a timid man, incapable of quick decisions or the shaping of earth-shaking policies. At 56 and 57 he faces his crucial years requiring momentous decisions. The sign of a suspended needle between his eyebrows means consistent threats of personal danger."

Edward Kennedy, 47: "He's obviously an ambitious man, but his unbalanced eyes indicate impulsiveness and instability. There is a faint vertical line in the centre of his forehead which, together with his unbalanced eyes, clearly indicate serious personal danger ahead within the next two or three years, if not earlier."

Jerry Brown, 41: "A born politician. Very imaginative young man, capable of surprising actions. At 41 and 42 he faces the great challenge of his political life; he could be a dark horse. But his seemingly phlegmatic personality may cause him to lose votes. His continual political fights will see greater results at age 50."

Ronald Reagan, 68: "He has the best balanced and most proportionate face of all candidates. His inner energy is strong and enduring, and he may be regarded as the most stable person in the political arena today regardless of his views. His chances are good in 1980 despite his age."

John Connally, 62: "His nose tip is broken; he's got a line from his inner left eye corner all the way to his left cheekbone, indicating constant danger to his person. He is a first-rate talent, very daring and quick on positions, somewhat brutish in his wheelings and dealings. About his ideas, he can be boorish, only to regret afterwards. His forcible personality and controversial ideas cannot win popular support."

Regeneration puzzle spurs study

By WALTER SULLIVAN
New York Times

Several years ago at Children's Hospital in Sheffield, England, a child appeared with the tip of one finger cut off. Doctors dressed the wound, intending to refer the child to a plastic surgeon for further treatment.

But through a clerical error the child was forgotten and not seen again by a doctor for several days. When the dressing was finally removed, the finger tip had begun to grow back. "There was eventually complete regrowth of the tip," one of the British doctors later reported in a medical journal. Now, many such finger tip amputations are treated that way at the hospital, and there are several documented cases in which a finger tip has grown back, complete with fingernail, sensation and even a fingerprint.

The British finding is more than a medical curiosity. On a broad front, scientists are studying regeneration of limbs and nerves. Their experiments focus on animals, such as amphibians, and the day when whole human limbs can be regenerated is undoubtedly far off.

Nevertheless, there is optimism that continuing experiments in nerve regeneration may eventually help those who become paralyzed through spinal injury to walk again. It might be possible to cause new nerves to grow across the spinal column break and restore communication with the regions of the body beyond the break.

Some of the more encouraging work has recently been reported from Yale University, where experimenters have traced microscopically the manner in which nerves grow across the point where the spinal cord of a lamprey has been severed. Such regrowth enables the paralyzed eel to swim again. Researchers hope to learn why this occurs spontaneously in such animals and not in mammals, including man.

The Yale scientists cite findings in Sweden and the Soviet Union that the nerve signals that control walking seem to originate in a nerve center of the spine, rather than in the brain, whose role seems to be only to send a signal initiating the walking sequence. Such findings suggest that to restore walking it may be necessary to re-establish only a minimal nerve link across the gap of a spinal injury. Dr. Melvin Cohen of Yale says it could be "like putting a nickel in the slot of a player piano."

Research on nerve regrowth is a key part of the continuing effort to understand, and perhaps control, other forms of regeneration. Application to humans, while still assumed to be far in the future, has become more plausible with documentation of the regrown finger tips.

But such regeneration poses major questions. Why, for example, can a child do this and not an adult? Why do electric currents seem to play a key role in regrowth? Researchers believe that if they can answer these questions, they will be on the track of ways to treat human injuries.

An important tool for defining the role of electric currents has been the development, by Dr. Lionel Jaffe of Purdue University, of a probe for that purpose. Newts and related amphibians can regrow severed limbs, and when the limb is amputated, Jaffe and others have found, a strong electric current flows out of the stump, returning via nearby undamaged skin.

Some experiments have shown that the electric current generated where a spinal cord has been severed is sufficient to illuminate a flashlight bulb. According to Cohen, strong currents also flow from the cut finger tips of children, but this phenomenon fades at puberty, and the ability to regrow a finger tip seems to vanish at about age 11.

The capacity of frogs partially to regrow limbs also declines with age. It appears that in most animals, if not all, regrowth will not occur if skin is allowed to grow across the stump.

Other experiments also have suggested that nerves, as well as electric currents, play an essential role in regeneration. Infant opposums will regrow a limb if extra nervous tissue is implanted in the limb beforehand. Conversely the salamander, which normally regenerates, will not do so if the nerve supply to the severed limb is cut off.

In human beings, peripheral nerves, such as those serving an extremity, regenerate, but not those of the central nervous system, including the spine.

Cyst removal is now a simple task

By DR. L.L. COLEMAN

I suddenly developed a painful cyst at the base of my spine. I'm 26, and I've been a good athlete for years. The doctor says I've had this for many years, even though it has never bothered me. Can you explain it? Is it a serious condition?

Mr. B.E.

Dear Mr. E.:

That which you describe is known as a "pilonidal" cyst. Your doctor is correct in saying that you have had this for a long time. This is a birth defect due to improper fusion during the development of the unborn child.

For some unexplained reason, the cyst, located at the lowest part of the spine, rarely causes trouble during childhood and early adolescence. Most often, they seem to become apparent during adulthood. It is only when the cyst becomes large or infected or painful that it is brought to the attention of the doctor.

An injury or an infection may activate a pilonidal cyst that may have been lying dormant for many years. Infected pilonidal cysts can be opened in the doctor's office. But this is a temporary measure. Unless the cyst is completely removed by surgery, there is a tendency for these infections to recur.

The operation was once a rather complicated one. It often took weeks for complete healing. Today, the operation is performed in a simpler manner. The wound is completely closed, and healing is very rapid. The operation is a very safe one. After one or more episodes of infection, it is particularly wise that surgery be performed. To delay this makes the operation more difficult because of the formation of scar tissue after each additional infection.

The condition is not a serious one, but certainly is a nuisance that reponds readily to surgical intervention.

Dear Doctor:

I moved into a new house two months ago. Since then my hands are red and swollen. The itching is unbearable. It's so bad I'm thinking of moving because I'm convinced that there's something in this house that's causing this. I am 11 years old.

Mrs. E. W.

Dear Mrs. W.:

It strikes me that moving is a far more arduous task than getting the opinion of a doctor. Your problem may be eczema or another form of dermatitis (skin infection). Crusting, oozing of the skin, itching, scaling and redness can all be associated with some allergy.

There are many excellent drugs, taken by mouth or applied as ointments, which can be very effective in the control of this condition.

Here's to health for '80

dr. elizabeth bright-see and jane hope

Have you been saying all year that you're going to take off those unwanted 10 pounds? Or you know you'd feel and look better if your tummy was a little flatter. Or your doctor has told you to cut down on saturated fats, and you just haven't had time to start with all the hiday festivities. Then, how about making a few nutrition-related New Year's resolutions that will pay dividends to your personal health in 1980. We've listed a few suggestions. But, promise yourself one thing. Once you've made a resolution, don't break it!

— I will eat more fruits, vegetables and whole grain cereals.

— I will eat less fatty meats like beef and pork, and more lean meats like veal, poultry and fish.

— I will cut down on sugar and foods high in sugar.

— I will substitute non-fat, skim and low-fat milk products for whole milk.

— I will cut down on foods high in fat and substitute poly-unsaturated fats for saturated wherever possible.

— I will cut down on eggs, butterfat and other high cholesterol foods.

— I will cut down on salt and foods high in salt.

— I will broil foods rather than fry wherever possible and will trim off all visible fat.

— I'll try recipes using legumes, nuts and seeds for protein rather than meats for a change.

— I will eat some high fibre grains, cereals and fruit.

— I will take off those pounds by following a sensible diet based on Canada's Food Guide.

— I will not go on any wild and wonderful fad diets.

— I will get up a few minutes earlier each morning and start doing some basic exercise.

— I will walk rather than drive — as often as possible.

— I will cut down on alcoholic drinks.

— I will stop smoking.

— I will read a reliable book on nutrition, recommended by my local public health nutritionist.

— I will keep a pin-up of Canada's Food Guide on the door of the refrigerator.

— I will serve a variety of foods each day to my family so that they can get all their vitamins and minerals this way — rather than through pills.

— I'll serve fresh fruit and cheese for dessert at my next dinner party, and raw vegetables for nibbles (and start a new, healthy trend).

— I won't nibble on leftovers.

— I will encourage the kids to help with the preparation of their school lunches and snacks — and will make sure the food is tasty and nutritious.

— I won't eat when watching television.

— I will keep a supply of raw vegetables, cheese, crackers, nuts on hand for after-school munchies.

— I won't skip meals.

— I will have a bran muffin, cheese or plain yogurt for mid-morning break, rather than a gooey doughnut.

— I will cut down (or cut out) the cream and sugar that I add to coffee or tea.

None of these resolutions are hard to follow. Be realistic, and honest, though. Pick out one or two that you know you'll stick to — then add a couple more later on in the year. Keep this up until each resolution becomes a habit. Keep going back to the list and introduce a new change once you're comfortable with the previous one. Remember, new behaviour will become a habit. Your goal is to make many of these resolutions a part of your life.

New trial over blood

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — A federal appeals court has ordered a new trial for a Florida woman convicted by a jury of evading taxes on $87,200 she made in 1972 by selling her rare blood plasma.

On a 10-to-4 vote, the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled that Dorothy Garber's U.S. District Court trial was unfair because the judge excluded testimony from a defence witness.

Court records show that Mrs. Garber made $238,800 by selling her rare blood plasma between 1970 and 1972.

Daniel Nall, a former revenue agent, said Mrs. Garber is the only one who could put a value on something so personal as her blood, and therefore the money received could be deemed to be the equal of the value she put on it — resulting in no taxable profit.

The government argument rested on testimony by Jacquin Bierman, a New York City law professor, who said Mrs. Garber was selling a product.

She is one of two or three persons in the world known to have blood containing a rare antibody useful in the production of blood group typing serum.

Dental fears unlearned

By BLYTHE HAMER
Washington Star Service

The fear began for Victoria Falco 10 years ago, when her dentist insisted on drilling a deep cavity while watching the World Series on a portable TV set.

"I was in such pain I had tears running down my cheeks," the 27-year-old computer operator from Gaithersburg, Md., said.

"I was afraid to say anything because he was watching the game. And I was afraid to leave because I had an open tooth."

The fear ended just last month, when Falco finally made her first dental appointment since that fateful visit a decade ago.

"I can even imagine the ultimate - hearing the crunching sound of your tooth," she said.

An estimated 5 to 10 percent of the nation's population suffers, as Falco did, from dental phobias for which previously there was no help.

But now a new course offers a solution to the fear of fillings.

Sponsored by the Southern Maryland Dental Society, "Smile -Dentistry Without Fear" is a six-session course billed as the first of its kind in the country.

Already, Falco and another student in a recent graduating class of eight have visited dentists.

"Before I took this course, I didn't even like to have my teeth cleaned," said Polly Gooch, 52. "I guess I was afraid of what they'd find."

The intensive program — it meets twice weekly for three weeks — is split into two sections in which different methods are used to help conquer fears. Since the course is a groundbreaker, dentists are not sure which method is more effective.

Falco and Gooch learned the systematic desensitization process, a muscle-relaxation technique commonly used to conquer phobias of any kind.

Under the guidance of two dentists and a psychologist, students visualized all the steps involved in a trip to the dentist - making the appointment, sitting in the chair, getting an injection, seeing the drill approach the mouth.

They then had to practice their relaxation techniques in the face of these progressively nerve-wracking situations, until they could learn to be calm even while hearing the whine of the drill.

"Anxiety is learned through past experience," said Dr. Robert Gatchel, the psychologist who oversees the program. "Most of the pain associated with dentistry is blown way out of proportion.

"We use the systematic desensitization process under the theory that you can't be physically relaxed and mentally anxious at the same time.

"But just talking about your fears also releases anxiety," said Gatchel, who works in speech anxiety at the Uniformed Services University of the Health Sciences in Bethesda, Md.

The other section of "Dentistry Without Fear" uses discussion as therapy. In the informal, 1½-hour sessions, patients talk about their fears and share their experiences with other phobiacs.

Dental nightmares were not uncommon, and the phobiacs often got glassy-eyed just thinking about dentistry.

Students' progress was measured in several ways. At each class, participants filled out a standardized form that asked questions like "How nervous do you feel?" and "How tense are you?"

Dental assistants, trained by Gatchel, measured the students' stress levels by noting clenched hands or other sgns.

The idea for the course was born two years ago, when the Southern Maryland Dental Society met to discuss the effects of new legislation allowing dentists to advertise.

"You'd see ads saying 'Plates - only $50' and there would be no mention of whether the plates were fitted or how they were made," said Dr. Barlow Wagman, one of the originators of the course.

The $30 course fee, which is fully refunded if students attend all six sessions.

Unborn receive a break

TORONTO (CP) — Last summer, 15-year-old Melissa's idea of a vegetable was french fries. She never even bothered with breakfast and her dinner might consist of a cup of canned spaghetti and a few date squares.

It was a poor diet for a normal teenager, a dangerous one for a pregnant teen.

It didn't occur to Melissa — whose mother lives on family benefits — that she was not only hurting herself, she was hurting her uborn child, possibly for life.

Today, while a visitor chats with Melissa there's a glass of milk in front of her. It's one of five or six she drinks every day.

Seven months pregnant, Melissa has said goodbye to soft drinks, chocolate bars and french fries, replacing them with snacks of green pepper, fresh fruit and cheese wedges.

The $38,000 experiment, funded by the city's public health department, is the first in Ontario and one of the very few in Canada. It wants to show that low-income mothers in high-risk pregnancies can produce babies as bright and healthy as those born to middle- and high-income mothers — provided they are given good nutritional guidance.

Another year — and another chance

By DR. JEAN MAYER
DR. JOHANNA DWYER

With the new Year, many of us have resolved: "This year, I'm really going to lose weight and keep it off." Considering that about 30 per cent of our adults population — and 10 to 20 per cent of all teenagers — are estimated to be overweight, it's clear that this well-intentioned resolution will be broken almost as soon as it's made.

It need not be. To be sure, loss of weight is never easy, especially if you want to keep it off once it's gone. But if you know and apply a few simple rules, it is possible.

Indeed, there is no reason whatsoever why you can't lose weight, enjoy your food, get into better physical shape, and end up with a healthier long-term diet, all at the same time. In this five-part series, we will be telling you how. And we will also offer sample menus recipes and exercises that not only will help you get started but will keep you going.

First, though, you should know that there are a lot of people who try to reduce who really shouldn't. Pregnant women, for example, should never go on a weight-loss diet. Many teenagers, girls in particular, judge their appearance not by the way they actually look — which may be very attractive indeed — but by how far it deviates from that of the model or film star who's the idol of the moment. Being pencil-thin should not be the goal of most teen-age girls.

Most adults are more realistic about what diets can do for them. Still, many people assume that their "ideal weight" is supposed to be the number given for their height and "body build" in life insurance tables. In reality, these tables are not always applicable to specific individuals. Moreover, they are not based on scientific studies.

The one thing you must always remember is that you can't lose bone, and you don't want to lose muscle. So before beginning our diet, why not check to be certain you are too fat?

Take off all your clothes and look at yourself in a mirror. If you look fat, you probably are. Are there obvious bulges of flesh?

Next, lie flat on your back on the floor and put a yardstick down along a middle line of your body. It should touch both the chest and the pelvic area. If the ruler rides above them, you're carrying too much stomach fat.

For men, there's what we call the belt-line test. The circumference of the chest at the line of the nipples should be greater than that of the abdomen at the line of the navel. If your stomach circumference is larger, you are a prime candidate for a diet.

Finally, there's the "pinch" test. Over half the fat on the body is just under the skin, so this method gives and accurate estimate of the total amount of body fat. To measure yourself, stand erect and let your arms hang free and relaxed. Ask your spouse or a friend to pinch up a fold of skin (not the muscle) at the back of your upper arm, halfway between elbow and shoulder.

The fold should measure between one-quarter and one-half inch thick. If it's much less than half an inch, you're "underfat", no matter how square and solid you may look. If it's more than an inch thick, you are obese or approaching it, and should surely consider beginning a reducing program. And you can expect to be on it for a long time. Go to a doctor to get a sensible diet. Don't just try to do it yourself.

If the fold is between one-quarter and one-half inch, you do have some fat to lose, but not an excessive amount. The question is how much, how fast, and exactly how?

A teenager who thinks she (or he) is more than five to 10 pounds overweight should consult a physician: what teenagers think and what they need are two different things. In the teens, your proportionate need for calories and nutrients is greater than it will ever be again.

Even if you only want to lose two or four pounds it is unwise to try to cut the daily amount of calories below 1,400 to 1,600 for a girl and 1,800 to 2,000 for a boy. If you go below these figures, you can't count on getting all the nutrients you need. Moreover, you will stop any residual growth in height you may be hoping for.

Women over 21 and men over 25 are beyond the growth period. Thus, if you were healthy and felt you looked your best then, your weight at that age is a good level for your personal goal. However, if you decide to lose more than 20 pounds, take the time to consult your doctor first. Above all, don't cut the number of total calories in your daily diet below 1,200 calories for a woman and 1,600 for a man.

Our body puts fat on in tiny increments as a result of eating a few extra calories a day. It's always tempting to go on a crash diet, get rid of it in a hurry, and then go back to normal eating. But please don't. Many of these diets are lacking in some of the essential nutrients. Some, like many so-called "high-protein" diets, which are in reality high-fat, are dangerous to your cardiovascular health. Some, like the liquid protein fast, are dangerous to life itself.

Weight control is not enough. A good diet should help you to establish a pattern of healthy, lower-calorie enjoyable eating — and a pattern of healthy exercise — that you can follow for a lifetime.

In 1940, cystic fibrosis was recognized for the first time. It was generally diagnosed at autopsies of infants and children who had died as a result of dehydration or malnutrition. The year 1950 saw the development of enzyme replacements that assisted the growth and nutrition of cystic fibrosis children. Still, life expectancy was only about four years of age.

It wasn't until 1970 that extensive daily treatment routines were developed. In addition, it was now easier to distinguish between cystic fibrosis and other diseases with similar symptoms. Life expectancy for cystic fibrosis children had risen to 14.

Mysticism a comfort to ailing King

OTTAWA (UPC) — Four volumes of 1949 diaries dramatically reveal that fuzzy dreams, visions and a tiny magic rapping table held great comfort for an aging and ill William Lyon Mackenzie King.

King, bewildered and frustrated after his retirement from the prime ministership after 21 years, turned increasingly to spiritualism, the diaries released Wednesday by the Public Archives show.

In earlier years, he had asked spirits — including his dead mother's — to help him rule the country, but by 1949 he was trying to sort out his personal life.

In his 1949 diaries, King described a total of 57 visions, dreams and table-rapping sessions he had had during that year.

On Jan. 4, while visiting his close friend John D. Rockefeller in Maine, King wrote that he was distressed by a dream in which he lost his overcoat, which he took to mean that, by retiring, he had lost his identity and station in life.

A few days later, while traveling back to Ottawa, he had a dream in which he was lost in the old world and had difficulty hearing, dropped his glasses and couldn't find his money.

The 74-year-old King saw the dream as evidence of his advancing years and of the necessity of "making the most of my remaining years."

King frequently dreamt of his confidant Rockefeller and former British prime minister Winston Churchill. Both men made King feel totally relaxed, safe and happy.

On Aug. 24, King wrote that he had a vision in which he rubbed cheeks with Churchill, revealing his tender side. Later, he and Churchill were alone on a snowy hill when the land around it suddenly fell away, leaving the two men safe with each other.

In August, King stayed close to his favorite table, exercising his long-time practice of table-rapping to gain insight.

While visiting Rockefeller, he wrote that a session convinced him he had to get on with writing his memoirs or his life story would be misinterpreted.

King's mother and father frequently appeared in his dreams, and he often called on their spirits to stay by his side and help him.

He wrote that he was terrified when he was forced to eat opiates in one nightmare in August. Later, he decided the vision meant he should be wary of drugs, including the sleeping pills that he now needed almost every night.

King also wrote that President Franklin Roosevelt gave him a postcard in a vision, an act that allowed King to get a full night's sleep.

"His presence was very real, very sweet and very soothing," King wrote on Sept. 1.

The House of Commons also crept into King's dreams and in September, he dreamt he was caught in a cylinder with Lady Clatterbuck and Conservative Leader George Drew.

To King, Drew symbolized his imprisonment if he had stayed on as Liberal leader and Clatterbuck, an unknown lady, represented the freedom in his retirement.

Town garage morgue for 41

CHAPAIS, Que. (CP) — The 3,500 residents of this isolated northern mining town mourned their dead Wednesday as officials tried to identify victims of the New Year's Day fire that killed 44.

Forty-one badly-charred bodies remained laid out in the municipal garage, and another three persons died in hospital in Quebec City where they had been flown for treatment of severe burns.

Thirty-one victims had been identified by late Wednesday, as investigators struggled to piece together dental records, jewelry and bits of clothing that might give them clues to the identity of people burned beyond recognition.

Fire commissioner Cyrille Delage paid a brief visit to Chapais, and quickly headed back to Quebec City, taking with him 21-year-old Florent Cantin, an unemployed laborer being held as a material witness.

Cpl. Yvon Martel of Quebec provincial police said Cantin was being transferred to Orsainville prison, near the provincial capital, for his own protection. Jails in the Chapais region are small, Martel explained, "and some of the other prisoners might be revolted by him."

careful to point out that Cantin had not been charged with any crime, and is being held only until an inquest determines whether there was any criminal activity in the fire.

Meanwhile, more than 100 townspeople got working on committees to feed, lodge and find money for families of the victims. The town has a number of new orphans on its hands — nobody knows yet how many, although unofficial estimates have gone as high as 20 or 30.

Mayor Gerard Pellerin, who was among the more than 300 guests at the New Year's festivities, said he "didn't hear anybody shout when the fire broke out.

"Everybody seemed transfixed, and there was no noise."

Pellerin said many people thought chemical fire extinguishers would suffice to put out the fire, and only the speed with which the flames engulfed the one-storey building sent people scurrying to the exits.

Wealth gap widens, StatsCan finds

By ESTELLE DORAIS

OTTAWA (CP) — Despite all the talk about distributing incomes more fairly and the mass of social welfare programs established since the 1960s, Statistics Canada says the gaps in the distribution of wealth have widened.

Wealth is defined as the value of assets such as a house, a car, shares and the yacht. Income is any wage, salary or money earned from assets such as dividends.

In a study released Wednesday, based on a survey of consumer finances conducted in May, 1977, the federal agency says the most-affluent 10 per cent of family units had 27.2 per cent of all the income, but 31.7 per cent of all the wealth.

Respondents from among the least affluent 10 per cent had 1.2 per cent of total income and 3.7 per cent of total wealth, meaning the gap in wealth, at 28 per cent — 31.7 minus 3.7 — is greater than the gap in income at 26 per cent.

Home ownership is the biggest chunk of wealth family units have and the difference is stark when compared with the wealth of non-home owners, even in the group making under $3,000 a year in 1976.

Here, home owners had average wealth of $47,278, of which the house accounted for $26,911, leaving $20,367 in other assets.

Those in the same income bracket who did not own a house had an average wealth of $2,182.

As a Statistics Canada official described it, the home owners include retired people who have yet to convert assets into income.

Boris Mazikins said the survey simply covers the distribution of income for one year. Although respondents were questioned in May, 1977, income figures are for the full year of 1976.

It is part of a mosaic showing how distribution of income and wealth changes with time, but the report containing the historical profile back to 1955 won't be out until early this summer, Mazikins said.

The sample consisted of about 17,000 households. At that time, there were about eight million family units of which 27.8 per cent were single people and 72.2 per cent contained two or more people.

A family must be related, Mazikins explained, although men and women living together outside marriage are included.

Respondents were also classified as employed, self-employed or out of the labor force. Family units in the higher income groups had more than one bread-winner, with most of them taking in a combined $35,000 or more.

Of these, 606 of every 1,000 people had incomes. For those earning under $3,000, only 267 of every 1,000 had incomes.

The highest percentage of families occurred in the group earning $35,000 and over. In this group, 97.6 per cent were families and only 2.4 per cent were single.

Single people outnumbered families in the lowest income ranges of under $3,000 and between $3,000 and $6,999. In these groups, 83.3 per cent and 51.4 per cent were single people, respectively.

Besides the house and car, interests in a business, a farm or a profession increased wealth.

The wealthiest family units were those reporting business activity in the finance, insurance or real estate field. They had an average wealth of $366,297, with an average income of $38,635.

Next were those engaged in the professions with an average wealth of $307,901 and average income of $47,427. The average wealth of those reporting interests in these activities as well as those with investment in agriculture, construction and others was $152,591, with an average income of $22,727.

The average of wealth holdings peaked in the age group — 45-54 — which also had peak average income, the report concluded.

"This was somewhat contrary to past findings where maximum holdings of wealth occurred in the 55-to-64 age bracket," the report said, adding that a more detailed analysis is required to find the explanation.

The peak reverted to the 55-to-64 age group once investment in business, farm and professional interests were excluded, "but it cannot really be concluded that this component alone is responsible for such a shift in the peak of wealth holdings."

'Narrow interests' lashed by Clark

ELECTION 80

OTTAWA (CP) — Prime Minister Clark accused Liberal Leader Pierre Trudeau and the New Democrats Wednesday of putting "narrow political interests" ahead of the cause of federalism and the need to get Canada's economy back on track.

Clark told a crowd of party workers here his Progressive Conservative government avoided Trudeau's "gun-slinger federalism" and "lowered the temperature" of Ottawa-Quebec relations during its six months in office.

His government did not give Quebec Premier Rene Levesque "a target to attack" or a chance "to whip up sentiment against Ottawa" and support for the Quebec government declined during his administration, Clark said.

Trudeau and the NDP "can hardly have had the federalist cause uppermost in their minds" when they defeated the government, setting the stage for the Feb. 18 election, he added.

The two opposition parties also showed their "narrow political interest" by defeating Finance Minister John Crosbie's budget, a measure designed to help restore the country's economic health, Clark said.

Clark, who campaigns today in Montreal, said the opposition move sets back the business of the country "almost a year" and leaves Canada without a federal Parliament to deal with the Quebec referendum and crucial energy and economic issues.

Clark hit hard at the record of the previous Liberal administration as he resumed campaigning after a Christmas break. He referred repeatedly to the "wasted years" of the Liberal government which he said created record economic deficits, undermining the Canadian economy.

"Mr. Trudeau avoided making hard decisions. We are facing these hard decisions because we believe that's the duty of responsible government."

Clark said his government had started to make the changes necessary to achieve energy self-sufficiency, improve the economy and better relations with Quebec but the Liberals and NDP allowed it only six months in office.

Clark reiterated that he has asked Senator Arthur Tremblay, a former deputy intergovernmental affairs minister in Quebec, to prepare federal proposals for a new constitution.

Hees hoping to pass on winning ways

OTTAWA (CP) — George Hees, a former Progressive Conservative cabinet minister who successfully fought 10 federal election campaigns, hopes to pass along his winning formula to aspiring colleagues in the current campaign.

The 69-year-old Hees and Fred Hacker, Ontario vice-president of the federal Conservative party, will tour the country instructing Tory candidates how best to win the hearts of voters for the Feb. 18 election.

The aristocratic Hees, MP for the southern Ontario riding of Prince Edward-Hastings, was first elected to the Commons in 1950.

High gas price no help: NDP

OTTAWA (CP) — The New Democratic Party said today that energy conservation, not high prices, is the way to self-sufficiency in Canada.

In an energy policy released in advance of a speech by Leader Ed Broadbent, the party said essential Canadian energy needs can and must be met from Canadian resources and self-sufficiency must be reached by the end of the 1980s.

Conservation was a top priority in achieving self-sufficiency. But high prices were not the way to achieve conservation.

Higher prices were "a regressive tax on low- and middle-income Canadians."

The budget that resulted in the defeat of the Conservative government last month proposed a large increase in petroleum prices, partly as a conservation method and partly as a spur to industry to continue exploration for new energy resources.

The NDP policy said: "Of equal importance is Canadians now have virtually no alternative in place other than the car to drive to and from work."

As immediate conservation measures, the NDP called for lower speed limits, improved bus and train service between cities and increased use of public transit.

Mushroom growing again after near-disastrous year

VANCOUVER (CP) — Mushroom Records, the independent record company which helped launch the musical group Heart, is regaining its financial feet after a discouraging year.

There have been reports the Vancouver company is about to fold, but Joe Owens, vice-president of promotion, says finances are being straightened out, the label has released five new albums and is expecting a revival of business in the U.S.

The company, owned by brothers Dick and Wink Vogel, has had a rough year, including $200,000 in cash debts and numerous other financial problems.

"The main problem was cash flow," Owens said. "We released only one album this year, Jerry Doucette's The Douce is Loose. We had outstanding obligations and no money coming in."

After unsuccessful attempts to find a buyer for the label, president Wink Vogel managed to get Los Angeles-based Black and White Sales, a company operated by Toronto entrepeneur Gary Salter, to provide some money.

In return, Salter and partner Tony Donato run Mushroom through a management company they own, although the Vogel brothers continue to own Mushroom.

The new backers provided the money to release two albums: Chilliwack's Breakdown in Paradise and another by English folk-rocker Ian Matthews called Siamese Friends. Several other albums are planned in 1980.

The arrangement also has resulted in closure of Mushroom's Vancouver promotion offices, which now will be run from Los Angeles and Toronto.

The Vancouver studio is where Heart's four-million selling Dreamboat Annie album was recorded. That album produced Mushroom's best year in 1976, but Heart also was partly to blame for Mushroom's downfall, Owens said.

The group split from the label in early 1977.

McQueen: $5 million a shot

scott's world
by vernon scott

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Movie stars have become the richest people in show business.

And the richest of the rich, if salary is the lone consideration, is Steve McQueen who now demands — and presumably gets — $5 million up front salary plus 15 per cent of the gross profits of each film he makes.

Clark Gable, Gary Cooper, Humphrey Bogart and other screen heroes in the past failed to earn that kind of money for acting alone in all of their careers.

Even legendary movie moguls of old didn't come close to salaries that high. Louis B. Mayer never earned that much money any year on the MGM payroll.

So far as is known McQueen is the only star to turn up his nose at $5 million. Not far behind McQueen in the high salary department are Burt Reynolds and Marlon Brando at $3 million, possibly $4 million, each.

Other big rich stars are Clint Eastwood, Robert Redford, Warren Beatty, Sylvester Stallone, Paul Newman, Barbra Streisand and Jane Fonda.

But comparisons of movie stars' wealth are difficult if not impossible to make. Investments, business income from various sources, real estate and other considerations make Bob Hope and other oldtimers astonishingly wealthy.

Discounting outside sources, perhaps the biggest money-earners in Hollywood are Beatty and Eastwood. They make their own pictures, taking only a token salary and ending up owning the film and its profits outright.

An associate of Beatty says the star personally cleared at least $10 million each from Shampoo and Heaven Can Wait both enormous boxoffice successes.

Eastwood's company, Malpasso Productions, almost always co-produces his films. A friend and business associate of Eastwood said he took almost no salary for Every Which Way But Loose and collected $16 million in profits.

Streisand has joined the magic circle, drawing a reported $2 million in salary plus a huge percentage of her films.

The only other actress who commands that much salary is Fonda who closed a one-picture deal at Columbia for a reported $2 million. Goldie Hawn, according to an associate, now gets $1 million per picture. And Jacqueline Bisset won't touch anything for less than an even $1 million.

Redford's asking price tops $2 million but he, like Beatty and Eastwood, is an entrepreneur who prefers to make his own pictures and reap the profits himself, a la All The President's Men.

Not all of Hollywood's superstars jump at the opportunity to grab that quick and easy money, however. Most take the long view of their careers and hold out for the best possible script.

Paul Newman was offered the father role in Superman for $3 million cash. The producers were so anxious to make the deal they promised he would not have to work more than 12 days and could choose any time between August 1977 and May 1978 to do his scenes.

He was also offered his choice of playing the role with or without a beard and any billing he wanted — above the title or whatever.

Newman turned it down. Brando, however took the deal.

One producer was asked why he was willing to pay an overweight Brando $3 million for a small role in a forthcoming movie. The answer: "Because we get an automatic $7 million back in foreign box office with his name in the cast."

Money sometimes isn't a factor at all. Newman was offered the starring role in The Electric Horseman and didn't care for the script. The film was later accepted by his friend Redford in a multimillion dollar deal and which promises to be a gigantic hit.

Redford's Wildwood Productions has a healthy percentage of the profits along with Ray Stark Productions and Columbia and Universal Pictures.

Even if inflation has reduced the value of a dollar, it is still interesting to see how casually an actor can turn down big bucks.

McQueen is top dog.

He recently completed The Hunter for which he was paid $3 million and a percentage of the profits.

Producer Steven North said McQueen will not bother to look at future scripts without a firm $5 million offer, 15 per cent of domestic and overseas grosses.

Carlo Ponti and North, who will produce The Manhattan Project with Sophia Loren, tested the waters by offering McQeen $4 million to co-star in the film.

McQueen's agent, Marvin Josephson, turned down the offer, North said. "Then we offered $5 million. That was turned down.

"The joke in the industry is that you can make a movie out of the phone book with Reynolds, Redford or McQueen."

Star Trek takes 10 nominations

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Star Trek, the Motion Picture has captured 10 nominations for the annual awards of the Academy of Science Fiction, Fantasy and Horror Films.

Star Trek will vie with Alien, The Black Hole, Moonraker and Time After Time for honors as best science fiction film of 1979 in the televised awards ceremony later this year.

The Amityville Horror, Dracula, Love at First Bite, The Mafu Cage and Phantasm are competing for honors as the year's best horror film.

309 IN MEMORIAM

HOBBIS — Hilda, in memory of our dear mother and grandmother, who passed away January 3, 1978.
Mothers Never Really Die —
They Just Keep House Up In The Sky.
Death beckoned her with outstretched hand
And whispered softly of "An Unknown Land" —
But she was not afraid to go
For though the path she did not know,
She took Death's Hand without a fear,
For He who safely brought her here
Had told her He would lead the way
Into Eternity's Bright Day . . .
And so she did not go alone
Into the "Valley That's Unknown"
She gently took Death By The Hand
And journeyed to "The Promised Land"
And there, with step so light and gay,
She polishes the sun by day
And lights the stars that shine at night
And keeps the moonbeams silvery bright . . .
[illegible] never die,
They just "Keep House Up In The Sky" . . .
And in the Heavenly Home Above
She waits to "welcome" those she loves.
—Sadly missed by her daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. A. Low (Norah and Sandy) and her granddaughter, Mrs. Grace Turner and family, all of Kamloops, B.C.

Always remembered by Michael, Craig, Linda and Dave, and grandchildren.

THEY SHALL GROW NOT OLD AS WE WHO ARE LEFT GROW OLD, AGE SHALL NOT WEARY THEM, NOR THE YEARS CONDEMN, AT THE GOING DOWN OF THE SUN, AND IN THE MORNING, WE WILL REMEMBER THEM.

Last chance for Leyland launched

By LEONARD DOWNIE
Washington Post

LONDON — Britain has launched a billion-dollar "last-chance" attempt during the early 1980s to save its ailing nationalized auto industry from succumbing to international competition and internal decay.

The rescue effort is built around a drastic plan to reorganize, refinance, retool and reform the image of British Leyland, the giant government-owned car maker that now calls itself BL Ltd., and to tackle the critical problem of declining productivity in British industry.

The problem facing Britain in its efforts to keep BL, among the world's 15 largest auto manufacturers, in business, is similar in many ways to that facing the United States in its effort to keep Chrysler from bankruptcy.

In both situations, government financial assistance, labor union concessions and relatively new corporate leadership are expected to play key roles.

Last month, BL's 150,000 employees approved the plan to streamline the firm by eliminating 25,000 jobs, closing all or part of 13 factories, phasing out several models including the venerable MG sports car, and selling off some subsidiaries.

On Dec. 20 the British government agreed to commit to BL up to a billion dollars more in taxpayers' money over the next four years to help finance the development of competitive new cars and commercial vehicles. This nearly doubles the government subsidy to BL.

Last Friday, BL chairman Sir Michael Edwardes signed an agreement with Honda in Tokyo for BL to build and sell exclusively here and in Europe a new medium-sized car designed by Honda, which the Japanese auto maker will market in the rest of the world.

Next, BL must win agreement from its unions on a 1980 labor contract holding down wage increases and making sweeping changes in traditional restrictive work rules that will modernize and increase the productivity of BL plants.

BL plans later in 1980 to introduce its most important internally developed new model, the Mini Metro, a redesigned version of its highly successful small economy car. BL also will mount a major "buy British" promotional campaign.

Edwardes, a cocky, energetic 48-year-old business executive who became BL's chairman two years ago and has directed the daring last-ditch recovery effort, believes he is gaining employee acceptance for his strategy and now must "win the support of the British public."

He said the promotional campaign will emphasize the "enlightened self-interest" the British have in buying British-made cars. A BL spokesman said the British will be told, in effect, "If you don't support your own industry, nobody else will."

BL, the only remaining British-owned car company, is a conglomeration of older firms that made Austin, Morris, Jaguar, Rover, Triumph and MG cars and Leyland trucks and commercial vehicles. Its production ranges from luxury Daimler limousines to tiny Minis.

But BL's production and sales have been steadily falling and that is also true of the foreign-owned segments of the British auto industry. It is one of a number of threatened British manufacturing industries, including steel, shipbuilding, home applainces and textiles, which are suffering from shrinking world markets, more efficient foreign competitors, ineffective British management and the steady decline in the productivity of British workers.

BL has been particularly hard-hit by past management confusion, inefficient production methods and frequent labor disputes. BL produces only half as many cars per employee as its European or Japanese competitors.

Edwardes decided to tackle BL's problems at the roots by trying to make each model and plant pay for itself. Unproductive plants were to be closed and unprofitable models replaced.

When BL's union shop stewards refused to accept the plant closings and job cuts in his plant, Edwardes and the BL board put the question to a vote of all BL employees. About 80 per cent participated in the mail ballot and more than 87 per cent of those voting backed Edwardes' plan.

Edwardes helped build the majority by telling the employees that BL could not survive without the cutbacks and that employees who lost their jobs could be compensated by $10,000 or more each in severance pay. The vote, he said, showed that union shop stewards "have not always represented the wishes of those they represent."

When some of the shop stewards tried to organize worker resistance to the recovery plan desite the vote, Edwardes took the unprecedented step of firing ringleader Derek Robinson, a veteran militant union leader at BL. When workers began walking off their jobs in support of Robinson, Edwardes told national union leaders that a strike would kill BL. They agreed, instead, to submit the case to a board of inquiry.

Impressed by Edwardes' initial success, Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's Conservative government decided to increase BL's government subsidy to help finance the recovery plan, although Thatcher's industry secretary, Keith Joseph, warned, "Success cannot by any means be guaranteed."

Edwardes now must convince BL's unions to agree to a 1980 contract under which wage increases may be limited to 5 percent — less than a third of Britain's inflation rate and of the average of other pay settlements in British industry — and to agree to drastic work rule changes.

"We cannot live on government money forever."

U.S. again selling arms to Taiwan

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The U.S. State Department said Thursday it is resuming the sale of defensive arms to Taiwan, including sophisticated guided missile systems.

The announcement follows termination at the end of 1979 of the formal defence treaty between Taiwan and the United States. In keeping with earlier announced plans, the State Department said it will sell Taiwan about $280 million worth of weapons, including anti-tank and anti-aircraft missile systems.

A spokesman said the Peoples Republic of China has been notified of the intention to resume arms sales to Taiwan, after a one-year pause.

According to the State Department, the new arms will include:

—TOW anti-tank missiles, which can be carried by helicopters and are steered by a wire-controlled guidance system.

—Rapid-fire 76mm anti-aircraft gun systems.

Near-paranoia behind Soviet moves in Kabul

By KEVIN KLOSE
Washington Post

MOSCOW — Driven by historic near-paranoia over the security of its own borders and confronted by unparalleled threats of instabilitiy all across its southern frontiers, the Soviet Union threw other concerns to the winds and marched into Afghanistan last week to forestall the loss of what the Kremlin saw as an essential, protective redoubt in time of extreme crisis.

During weeks of intensive study leading up to last Thursday's invasion of Afghanistan that installed a pro-Moscow puppet government in Kabul, the Communist Party leadership is said to have reached fundamental, pessimistic conclusions about its complex relations with the United States and China that spurred it to act even though the leadership knew it would trigger harsh world reaction.

Regardless of threats or demands from the rest of the world, or its own statements to the contrary, the Soviets intend to convert the once-autonomous nation into another Mongolia, the totally subservient, Soviet-garrisoned puppet state that was set up by the Communists in 1921 to help secure its Chinese border. The Soviets are reliably said already to consider Afghanistan an integral part of the Soviet military zone and foresee a virtual state of occupation for many years to come with Russians handling the essentials of government of Babrak Karmal.

This picture of Soviet perceptions and intentions emerged from interviews here with unofficial Soviet sources and well-informed veteran Western sources. According to these persons, there are two basic Kremlin conclusions that may affect East-West global relationships long after the Afghani takeover is a matter for historians. They are:

— The SALT-II treaty, long hailed here as the cornerstone of East-West detente, is dead, killed by a truculent U.S. Senate and hardening anti-Soviet opinion in the United States that will mean tough new military building programs in the coming years on the part of the West and a heightened atmosphere of tension.

— Despite Soviet hopes for rapprochement with arch-rival China after the death of Mao Tse-tung in 1976, the post-Mao Chinese leadership shows no sign of changing his anti-Moscow antagonism. Peking is said to have rebuffed both public and private Soviet initiatives for relaxing tensions, thus insuring a continued direct threat to the U.S.S.R. across its heavily fortified Chinese border.

This account of Kremlin thinking surrounding the unprecedented Afghani invasion cannot be said to be complete. Many matters of concern to Western policy-makers are unanswered. No official Soviet source with direct access to the leadership processes was interviewed. They have been unavailable, in part because of the new year holiday. But in its consistently one-sided argumentation and perspective, it can be said to present an accurate sense of the gut perceptions and concerns of Moscow's leaders as they have come to be seen here through the years.

Within the larger framework of historic Russian border fears, three basic situations are said to have coincided to bring Moscow to the point of interventions . Not necessarily in order of magnitude, these were:

— The fundamentalist Islamic revival taking place in Turkey, Iran and Pakistan (not a direct Soviet neighbor) threatens endless political-religious turmoil among neighbors with whom the Soviets have always sought stable relations. This upheaval is judged as essentially beyond Moscow's ability to control and could lead to the eventual establishment of Islamic governments actively antagonistic to the aetheist Soviet regime, fomenting rebellious or separatist impusles in its own Moslem Central Asian peoples, who number about 50 million and constitute the chief source of fresh Soviet manpower through the end of the century.

Second Mongolia

— The American position in Iran can never get worse than it is right now now. From a Soviet point of view, if the embassy occupation ends in tragedy, the Soviet leadership anticipates some form of U.S. military retaliation that surely would bring recrimination from many Mideast and Moslem states but could ultimately establish a direct U.S. military role in Iran with obvious consequences for Soviet border concerns and its own expansionist aims in the Persian Gulf.

If the Tehran crisis is resolved peacefully, then the Soviets fear renewed American influence as the ultimate consequence, despite Ayatollah Khomeini's pugnacious anti-American stance. Khomeini has proved intractable and inflammatory toward Moscow despite Soviet efforts to curry his favor and the Kremlin is thought to have concluded it cannot expect basic improvements with its relations with his fanatical Islamic government.

Washington, seen from here as fully tied down dealing with its Tehran crisis, could not effectively mount any countermove to the swift, surgical Afghani takeover the Soviets were planning.

— Meanwhile, with the rest of the region in turmoil, the Marxist regime in Afghanistan was seen from here to be in critical danger of collapse at the hands of the Moslem tribal insurgents despite heavy Soviet military and economic assistance. Moscow's choice, Nur Mohamed Taraki, had been deposed and slain in the coup by Hafizullah Amin last September, who proceeded to bridle at Moscow directives and further arouse the Moslem guerillas. Such a reversal, with possible establishment of a new Moslem leadership in Kabul, was an intolerable prospect for Moscow.

These situations, combined with Moscow's view that SALT-II ratification was no longer possible, is seen here as likely explaining why the Kremlin launched its military intervention last week instead of waiting for a Senate vote on the treaty, predicted in about two months. If the Kremlin believed ratification likely, it is said here, the Russians would have waited until the wote was safely in hand and then gone into Afghanistan.

The Soviet leaders are said to see in Afghanistan a new strategic buffer against China, which has strengthened itself by improving relations with the West. The new Afghanistan also is seen as a powerful South Asian wedge with which to exert influence on the other countries of the region, perhaps dampening pan-Islamic tendencies and easing Soviet border fears.

SALT frustrations

This view has already been reinforced here by the equivocal stance of India, which has more Moslems than has Pakistan. Indira Gandhi, seen by Moscow as the likely new Indian prime minister, has favored the Russians against the United States, China and Pakistan in the past and has not condemned the invasion.

The Kremlin is said to intend to ignore Western outcry and to blunt the Moslem world's rage by trying to build a hybrid Islamic-Socialist state. Babrak will form a national front government composed of various special interest groups, and find Islamic holy men to speak out in support.

Already Wednesday, the official Soviet Tass agency quoted an Afghani Moslem religious leader, Abdul Aziz Seddiq, as expressing "profound joy over the removal of the Amin tyranny that served as a tool in the plans of U.S. imperialism," and thanking the Soviets for intervening.

Babrak will move very slowly in charting fundamental changes in the society likely to cause Moslem backlash, such as full emancipation for women. The Soviets think they have learned well the lessons of their own Basmachi revolution, which convulsed Central Asia in the 1920s as the new Soviet government sought to exterminate Moslem belief and traditional life styles.

Indoor plants like company

When growing a number of plants indoors, group them rather than scatter them about the room. Like human beings, they like company of their kind and often deteriorate when left in solitary confinement.

Grouped, they create a certain atmosphere around themselves from which they all benefit, and the focal point of a mixed collection of plants in a room is always interesting.

When looking for a place to make the display, there are obvious locations which should be avoided.

Probably the most damaging position for any plant is immediately above a radiator or heat vent where rising hot air causes a draught through the foliage and takes out moisture.

Any draught, hot or cold, can be damaging to a plant, the worst locaton being a hallway or beside an entrance door during winter.

A portable tea trolley, or kitchen trolley, can be used as a plant table, having the advantage of allowing one to move the plants into good light during the day, and back into the room away from cold windows at night.

The higher the temperature in the house the drier the air, making life more difficult for most plants. Strange as it seems to many pot plant growers, the kitchen and the bathroom are often the two best rooms in the house for potted plants.

In these rooms they enjoy warmth, humidity, and light. Cooking and washing dishes in the kitchen, and showers and baths in the bathoom, seem to provide just the right atmospheric humidity.

It is surprising the number of trailing semi-tropical plants which do well on the top of the refrigerator. At this height they are well away from floor draughts, and extra warmth is provided by the coils. Many of these plants do not need the strong light near a window. In fact some are damaged in sunshine.

Brick planters were common in room design a decade past. Unfortunately these were usually placed as a divider by the side of an entrance door where the plants were badly damaged by winter draughts of ice cold air.

Success with these planters came when the owner placed a glass screen on the door side about four feet high. If you have such a planter which is not being used, try a baffle of clear plastic film. If it works for you the glass can be put in later.

It is not wise to set potted plants directly into soil in large planters because many of the plants need a restricted root run.

Better to fill the planter with terralite or sand and set the pots into the filler. This has many advantages. The display can be changed from time to time, plants which are out of flower or in their dormant periods can be removed, and each plant can be given just the amount of water it requires.

A wonderful display of plants can be made in an open fireplace for the summer months, providing the chimney damper is closed and the remaining flue opening plugged with sack to prevent strong winds from sucking cold air off the floor and causing a damaging draught. But don't forget to put a large card behind the plants with the reminder the chimney flue is plugged.

In every home there will be certain locations where plants will thrive, and others which plants dislike. Only by moving the plants to different areas for a week or so can the best locations be found.

$160,000 awarded in tire explosion

Cox News Service

ATLANTA — The Firestone Tire and Rubber Co. has been ordered by a federal court jury to pay a young Madison, Ga., woman $160,000 in damages for injuries she suffered when a tire manufactured by the firm exploded in 1977.

Tammy Lee Newbolt, who was 19 when the incident occurred, suffered serious burns and fractures. She had asked for $560,000.

Ms. Newbolt was attempting to push a car off a grassy incline onto a rain-slick street in Clarke County when the right rear tire exploded. Pieces of the tire hit her in the face, chest and leg.

She was left with both bones in her lower right leg broken, according to a lawsuit filed several months after the March 12, 1977, accident. Hot pieces of rubber stuck to her chest and laid open the left side of her face, causing extensive bone damage and the loss of her left eye, the suit contended.

The suit charged that the tire was defective and that Firestone, as its manufacturer, was liable. It also said the firm was negligent in not warning "of the propensity of the tire to separate or weaken when spun."

The jury of three men and three women agreed that Firestone was liable, then went back into deliberations to decide the penalty. The award was filed in federal court this week.

During the trial, lawyers for Firestone offered a number of demonstrations aimed at showing that the tire was not defective and that the explosion resulted from the centrifugal force of the spinning rear wheels.

Firestone filed a third-party suit against the driver of the car, Bobby Ray Young, who was ordered by the same jury to pay Firestone $10,000.

During a heavy rain, Young backed the car's rear wheels onto the slippery incline and could not get enough traction to pull back onto Whitehall Road in Clarke County.

Miss Newbolt and another passenger unsuccessfully tried to dislodge the car. She stepped away after several failures and was standing near the right rear tire when it exploded, according to the suit.

Union balks at more sacrifices for Chrysler

WINDSOR, Ont. (CP) — United Auto Workers union locals at Chrysler Canada Ltd. plants refused today to go along with further contract sacrifices to save the struggling automaker.

The refusal was delivered by Canadian union leaders to UAW president Douglas Fraser after a two-hour meeting in a union hall near one of Chrysler's Windsor plants.

Robert White, the union's Canadian director, said the refusal was the result of the Canadians' belief that the U.S. Congress could not tell them what to do.

He said that joining the concessions U.S. workers must make would have "horrendous effects in this country."

Fraser said he still expected the union's negotiating committee to approve the reopening of the October contract with Chrysler.

If Canadian workers had joined their U.S. counterparts, they would have given up about $2,000 each over and above the concessions they have made already.

Their refusal means that each of Chrysler's unionized U.S. employees will have to sacrifice another $2,400 in addition to the $2,000.

Unlike those working for General Motors of Canada and Ford Motor Co. of Canada, Chrysler Canada workers come under the same contract as their U.S. counterparts.

As a condition of approving $1.5 billion in loan guarantees, the U.S. Congress required Chrysler's unions to give up $462.5 million in contract concessions. Of that, the UAW gave up $203 million in the October contract, leaving it with $259.5 million to go.

Dissident theologian told to leave school

STUTTGART (Reuter) — Hans Kung, the dissident Swiss theologian suspended by the Vatican, has been told by a bishop to leave the Roman Catholic theology department of Tuebingen University, a state education official said Wednesday.

The order by Rottenburg Bishop Georg Moser was delivered Wednesday to the state education ministry after the Vatican confirmed the suspension on Sunday.

Kung, who accused Pope John Paul II of condemning him without a hearing, said he had no intention of complying with the bishop's wishes, which he said were beyond the prelate's jurisdiction.

He was stripped of his right to teach as a Roman Catholic theologian chiefly because of his divergence from orthodox church views.

Moser, one of five West German bishops who discussed the suspension with the pope on Friday, said Kung was obliged to give up his post because his faculty had church as well as state status.

Kung said the bishop's order was "an excessive interpretation" of the 1933 concordat regulations between the Vatican and Germany. He said he would go to court if necessary to clarify whether the church was right to interpret them so broadly.

Even a Roman Catholic theology department was a state establishment, not a church one, he said.

U.K. labor steeling itself for long fight

LONDON (UPI) — Labor union leaders backing the country's first steel strike in over 50 years called for international support to halt foreign steel shipments to Britain in the first major labor confrontation for Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher.

British officials of the International Transport Federation Wednesday called on its member unions around the world to prevent steel shipments from reaching Britain.

The labor officials made the move in support of 100,000 workers in Britain's near-bankrupt nationalized steel industry who shut down the furnaces Wednesday in their first nationwide strike since 1926.

Thatcher says improved production — not government subsidies — is how the ailing steel industry should pay the 16 per cent to 17 per cent pay hikes in line with inflation the steel unions are demanding.

On the average, British steelworkers earn about $240 a week.

Support for the steelworkers spread throughout Britain's labor movement, bitterly critical of Thatcher's economic policies.

Sid Weighell, leader of the National Union of Railwaymen, ordered his members — including crane drivers and lock operators at ports — to halt movement of all supplies to and from the steel industry.

The Trades Union Congress, the umbrella organization of some 10 million British union members, also announced its support Wednesday for the steelworkers and instructed member unions to give maximum support.

A lengthy shutdown would hit large sectors of industry, including automotive plants, shipbuilding, engineering and food canning. Most firms said they had a four- to six-week supply of steel.

Ceasefire camps starting to swell

SALISBURY (AP) — More than 5,000 Patriotic Front guerrillas were out of the Rhodesian bush and in camps monitored by Commonwealth soldiers today. A British military spokesman said a ceasefire that began six days ago is "obviously working."

Interim British Governor Lord Soames refused a request by guerrilla leaders in Salisbury to extend the deadline of midnight Friday night for the guerrillas to report. But a spokesman, Nicholas Fenn, made it clear there would be no immediate reprisals if the guerrillas are late.

Fenn said Soames "would not take any precipitate action," and that the British were encouraged by the number of guerrillas — about 2,000 — who reported Wednesday.

"The ceasefire is obviously working and the number of incidents (of violence) round the country has decreased," the British military spokesman said.

Immigration officials, in another sign of improving conditions, announced Rhodesia's border with Zambia is open at one crossing point, and that the border with Tanzania will be opened within a week.

Government sources also said repairs were being made today on the road across Victoria Falls Bridge to allow its re-opening soon.

"The governor's policy is to re-establish communications with all Rhodesia's neighbors as quickly as the practical restraints can be removed," a spokesman said.

During the seven-year civil war, the only border crossings open to anything other than rail traffic were on the South African frontier.

Reports continued to reach the capital today of banditry throughout the territory, but the British military spokesman said that Wednesday night was "very quiet" and added: "We hold that there's a difference between banditry and authorized breaches of the ceasefire."

Fenn said the governor refused to extend the ceasefire because the seven-day period had been agreed to in writing last month by the Salisbury government and guerrilla leaders Robert Mugabe and Joshua Nkomo.

The guerrillas argued a week is not enough time to get word of the ceasefire to all of their estimated 15,000 to 30,000 fighters deep in the hinterland.

If the guerrillas do not report to one of 16 assembly camps before the deadline they can be declared "outlaws," and Soames can use his sweeping powers to hunt them down.

British military sources are confident that most of Nkomo's Zimbabwe African Peoples' Union fighters and Mugabe's Zimbabwe African National Union guerillas will make it to the camps in time, however.

Fairweather selected to represent Canada

OTTAWA (CP) — Gordon Fairweather, head of the Canadian Human Rights Commission, will be senior Canadian representative on a Commonwealth group to monitor the Rhodesian elections Feb. 27-29.

External Affairs Minister Flora MacDonald said Wednesday in a statement that Fairweather will be assisted by three other Canadian government personnel. He is expected to leave shortly for Rhodesia.

Assisting Fairweather are Michael Phillips, counsellor in the Canadian embassy in Nairobi, Kenya; J. E. Forrester, information head for the chief electoral officer; and an external affairs department typist.

Three or four other government officials may join the Canadian group later, the statement said.

Israeli Turkish terror target

Times News Services

ISTANBUL — A leftist Turkish terrorist group claimed responsibility today for the ambush slaying of Israel's El Al Airlines station manager in Istanbul.

Anonymous callers claiming to represent the Marxist-Leninist Armed Propaganda Unit telephoned newspapers and said the Wednesday night slaying of Abraham Elazar was "designed to retaliate against the Israeli massacre of Palestinians."

They said Elazar, 40, "was the agent of Mossad," the Israeli secret service.

Elazar was the second Israeli slain by political terrorists in Turkey since 1971, when urban guerrillas of the now-defunct Turkish Peoples Liberation Army kidnapped and killed Israeli Consul Ephraim Elrom in Istanbul.

The continuing gangwar between rightists and leftists in Turkey has taken more than 2,500 lives in the last two years and severely damaged the country's economy.

And Turkey's armed forces issued a veiled threat of military takeover Wednesday, warning that the country's chronic political violence could escalate into rebellion and the turmoil in Iran and Afghanistan could turn the region "into a battlefield."

But political experts said the generals, reluctant to take power, would give civilian authorities more time to try to curb the unrest.

"We face a serious situation," said Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel, who declined to say if he would resign and end the rule of his 6-week-old right-wing government.

Eight die as Indian voters go to polls

NEW DELHI (AP) — Election-day violence took a reported eight lives today as tens of millions of Indian voters began choosing a new Parliament.

First indications were that voter turnout was low. In Rae Bareilly, north India, one of two districts where Mrs. Gandhi is a candidate, only 45 per cent of eligible voters cast ballots, the United News of India reported after polls closed.

Mrs. Gandhi, whose 11-year term as prime minister was ended in the 1977 general election, is trying for a dramatic comeback.

Another round of balloting is scheduled for Sunday in other areas, with final results expected Monday. A total of 362 million persons were eligible to vote in two days of balloting.

The UNI said a curfew was ordered in the large southern city of Hyderabad after two persons died of stab wounds and 28 others were hospitalized with injuries.

Three untouchable voters were shot dead and 25 injured in an election-day incident in Akbarpur Patti, a north Indian village about 160 kilometres east of here, UNI said.

It reported that at least three persons were killed in a clash between Communist party workers and police in Karimnagar district, just north of Hyderabad, in Andhra Pradesh state. UNI said the police fired live ammunition on the crowd.

A witness said the untouchables, members of the lowest Hindu caste, were forcibly kept from polling stations in Baghpat, caretaker Prime Minister Charan Singh's north Indian constituency. He said members of Singh's peasant Jat caste kept them from entering a polling station.

During the two-month campaign, at least 12 persons were killed and scores injured in clashes between local political groups.

The election is for the 524 seats in the lower house of Parliament. Some 144 million persons were eligible to vote in 244 districts today and 218 million are eligible to vote in 280 districts Sunday. There were a record 4,600 candidates.

LONDON (AP) — Pandemonium struck the world's gold markets today as buyers frightened by the deepening international political crisis drove the price of the precious metal above $600 ($690 Canadian) an ounce for the first time in history.

The U.S. dollar fell sharply and in New York, the Canadian dollar was down 3-100 at $0.8546.

Stock prices at Toronto and New York continued to tumble in heavy trading, but in New York bargain hunting and some strength from oil stocks reduced the Dow Jones loss to just 1.02, moving the industrial average to 823.55.

It had tumbled by as much as 11 points shortly after the market opened.

In Toronto, the stock market fell sharply in active trading.

The TSE 300 index was down 17.93 to 1,788.15.

All of the 14 stock groups declined, with the largest drop in real estate and construction.

The price of gold rocketed to $649.73 in Hong Kong, then slid back to $613.26. The closing rate was $72.01 above Wednesday's closing price of $541.25, while the high for the day represented a gain of $108.48.

Closing gold prices Thursday in U.S. dollars a troy ounce:

London-630.00 (record high);

Paris-644.18;

Frankfurt-631.03;

Zurich-635.00 (record high);

Hong Kong-613.26.

When the London market opened, bullion traded at a record bid-and-asked price spread of $615 to $630. At mid-afternoon, London's major bullion dealers fixed the price at a record $634 an ounce, up $74.50 from Wednesday's afternoon fixing and up $66.50 from the Wednesday's closing rate of $567.50.

In early New York trading, Republic National Bank quoted gold at $630 an ounce bid, $635 asked and said the market was "very busy."

In Zurich, Europe's biggest bullion mart, trading resumed after a five-day holiday period and gold opened at a spread of $615-$625. The late price of $635 was $118 higher than the last Zurich selling price of $517 an ounce on Dec. 28.

The price of other metals also climbed, with silver rising to a record $41.50 an ounce in London after closing at $40 Wednesday.

Gold dealers in Hong Kong reported hectic trading with more than 700,000 taels changing hands, compared with a normal daily turnover of 550,000 taels. A tael weighs 1.203 Troy ounces.

In Ottawa it was announced the government bought $10.7 million worth of gold in December as part of an international monetary fund program to increase gold reserves. The transaction brings gold reserves to $1.02 billion.

Banks sold out

Pity the Victoria man with $1,000 who heard this morning that the price of bullion was rocketing past $700 Canadian on world markets and decided to buy his very own ounce of gold.

If he went to the main Victoria branch Bank of Nova Scotia, he would have discovered, after waiting up to one hour in line, that there simply aren't any one-ounce wafers of the precious metal available.

The same situation applied in Toronto where buyers formed long lineups at gold dealers and stock market investors were snapping up gold mining shares.

"It's almost the herd instinct," said Stephen Harvey, vice-president of Deak Co. Ltd. in Toronto, where crowds were lining up along the sidewalk outside the foreign exchange building.

Things weren't quite so hectic in Victoria, but the two phone lines to the Bank of Nova Scotia's securities department were jammed most of the time.

Supervisor Velda Donkin said that in addition to the price of an ounce of gold itself — about $642 U.S. and climbing this morning — there is also a $2.50 melting premium, the bank's $10 commission, a $3 shipping charge and a $5 Telex charge to place the order to Toronto.

Add to that the exchange to bring the Canadian dollars up to U.S. strength and the cost of a single ounce of gold to the hapless Victorian with $1,000 is $765.12.

Mob puts Waldheim to flight

TEHRAN (AP) — An angry mob of fist-waving Iranians sent UN Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim fleeing in his limousine from a cemetery on Tehran's outskirts today just minutes after he arrived to lay a wreath at the graves of revolutionary dead.

In the city tens of thousands of Iranians gathered outside the occupied U.S. embassy to protest against the Waldheim visit in one of the biggest such demonstrations in recent weeks.

About 500 people, believed to include relatives of those buried at the sprawling Behesht Zahra cemetery, converged on the car carrying Waldheim to the cemetery from a pad where his helicopter touched down.

Waldheim, in Iran in an effort to defuse the crisis over the U.S. embassy hostage-taking, was on the ground for only six minutes and never left the car. As the chanting crowd encircled his car, he ordered the driver to return to the helicopter.

"Go! Go!" Waldheim could be seen shouting to his driver.

Once aboard the helicopter, the craft lifted off immediately, flying Waldheim back to the city, where he met with Foreign Minister Sadegh Ghotbzadeh for about three hours. Asked how the talks on the hostages were going, Waldheim, who looked tired, said: "The talks are continuing and it would not be helpful for me to elaborate at this point."

Waldheim later met with several hundred crippled Iranians said to have been brutalized under the regime of the ousted Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi.

The UN chief said he was "shocked" by the encounter.

"I shall bring this message of suffering to the United Nations and before the world community," he told the crowd, which filled three rooms in a former officers' club in central Tehran.

"We shall certainly do whatever we can do to assure that the mutilation of human beings will never take place again."

The visit with the disabled had been cancelled Wednesday when anti-Waldheim street demonstrations broke out and the government said it had uncovered an murder plot against Waldheim. Ghotbzadeh claimed the plot had "foreign backing."

It was also reported Waldheim met today with members of Iran's revolutionary council and that he would meet with the Ayatollah Khomeini Friday at the Moslem leader's headquarters at Qom.

The sudden rush by the cemetery crowd apparently caught police and revolutionary guards by surprise. Only about 20 were stationed at the area where Waldheim landed and they were unable to hold back the crowd.

The angry demonstrators shouted demands that "Waldheim should be thrown out of Iran." The also screamed slogans against the United States and the United Nations.

Waldheim flew to the cemetery south of the capital in response to a demand by the militants holding 50 hostages in the U.S. Embassy since Nov. 4. It is the burial place of many who died in the revolution that overthrew Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi last February.

Carter orders SALT stall

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — President Carter has asked Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd to delay Senate floor consideration of the SALT II treaty because of Soviet military moves in Afghanistan.

"While the president continues to believe that ratification is in the national security interests of the United States, he has concluded that the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan in defiance of the UN Charter has made consideration of the SALT II treaty inappropriate at this time," White House press secretary Jodi Powell told reporters today.

The Carter move was made amid reports Soviet forces were battling Afghan forces in the southern provincial capital of Kandahar and the eastern city of Jalalabad near Pakistan in their attempt to take consolidate their hold on Afghanistan.

Jalalabad is strategic because it has an airfield capable of handling large Soviet cargo planes and because it straddles a major road leading from the Pakistan border to Kabul.

No gas tax hike, Trudeau pledges

OTTAWA (CP) — A new Liberal government would not raise taxes on gasoline sold at the pump as has been promised by the Conservatives, Opposition Leader Pierre Trudeau said today.

"We will not raise the gas tax and we will implement fairer ways to deal with increased energy costs," Trudeau told a luncheon gathering of party workers and candidates here in his first Feb. 18 campaign appearance of the New Year.

Trudeau gave no further details of revised Liberal party energy and economic policies, saying only those views would be outlined soon.

By PAUL JACOBS
Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — The U.S. Food and Drug Administration has indicated that it will approve the first full-fledged scientific study of the effectiveness of laetrile in treating cancer patients.

One spokesman for the FDA said he expected that the go-ahead for the human trials would come within the next two weeks.

The drug would be tested only on individuals for whom other forms of treatment have failed or where no proven treatment has been available.

FDA approval is needed before the National Cancer Institute can go ahead with human laetrile trials, which the institute first proposed almost three years ago.

The cancer institute has been asked to repeat a study in which the laetrile to be used on cancer patients was tested for toxicity in rabbits, according to Lorraine Kershner, a spokesman for the institute.

The test has been repeated and no ill effects were found, said Paul Davignon, chief of the cancer institute's drug preparation branch.

The results of the toxicity test should remove the last remaining obstacle to beginning the laetrile trials.

In a year of negotiations with the FDA, the cancer institute has agreed to several modifications in its study, one which would require a study of how laetrile was broken down in the body even before its anti-tumor properties are checked.

The scientific establishment has generally dismissed laetrile as ineffective. All but a few studies in animals have shown the drug to have little or no effect in shrinking tumors.

In humans, the claims for laetrile have been anecdotal and difficult to evaluate scientifically.

Mad dash on for election ad time

By CAROL GOAR
FP News Service

OTTAWA — When every minute represents a multi-thousand-dollar opportunity to sell their leader, the political backroom boys abandon all pretence of gentlemenly restraint.

There is no room for manners in the messy squabble now raging among party organizers for the Feb. 18 election. At stake is $5-million-worth of broadcast time set aside for paid political advertisements. There are 390 crucial minutes on each network to be carved up among not only the Tories, Liberals and New Democrats, but the six smaller parties as well. And, like children fighting over pieces of birthday cake, they're all determined to grab all they can.

The fighting ends Friday at 5 p.m. By that time the Canadian Radio Telecommunications Commission, the federal agency which regulates the airwaves, is expected to impose an arbitrary time allocations which will be binding on all parties.

There could hardly be a more reluctant arbitrator. Under the Canada Elections Act, the CRTC has the legal obligation to sort out such quarrels, but the agency fervently hoped the parties would be able to agree among themselves.

Last time, it worked that way. Long before the battle of the airwaves began in mid-April, the six official parties sat down and agreed the Liberals should get 155 minutes, the Tories 134, the NDP 63, the Social Credit 22 and the Communists and Marxist-Leninists eight minutes aach.

The allotments were worked out basically to reflect each party's number of Commons seats and the percentage of popular support it had garnered in the 1974 election.

"We hoped they'd work things out among themselves again and the commission would merely have to agree or disagree, but it hasn't worked out that way," said Charles Tierney of the CRTC.

The trouble began almost as soon as the election writ was issued on Dec. 14.

As required, the officially registered parties — there were nine this time — went through the motions of trying to reach a consensus. But when three of the minor parties, notably the Rhinoceros Party of Montreal, a band of crazies with a platform of witty nonsense, demanded that all parties be given equal air time, the discussions degenerated into an exercise in futility.

The New Democrats had a more serious complaint.

They believed the whole system of using a neat mathmematical formula reflecting past performance needed to be re-examined. They were particularly upset when the Tories suggested the whole procedure be done by computer this time.

The Liberals were not altogether comfortable with the old formula, but were prepared to live with it, said chief organizer Gordon Ashworth.

Since agreement among the participants appeared remote, the CRTC proposed its own system of allocation and gave the parties until Dec. 31 to express their views. By that deadline, it had received four official objections, so the commission's executive committee met to thrash out the problem. To date, no conclusion has been reached.

Why zap the poor creep? Start a snail ranch

By PAUL MINVIELLE

Ah, remember those great old movies, the ones that revolved around classic horror themes and had names like The Lizard That Ate Tokyo and The Turkey That Trampled Toledo.

Now, lurking in some clever script writer's mind comes — wait for it — The Snail That Snuffed Saanich!

Giving rise to this horrific notion is news from Vancouver's Kitsilano area that a search for the gypsy moth turned up something else — the European brown garden snail.

Some epicures were no doubt delighted, for the European brown snail is a treat in the Old World. But when the little critter isn't bathed in garlic butter and hidden under the alias "escargot," it's a slimy, slithery, sneaky destroyer of vegetable gardens.

If only it ate slugs.

No one is recommending to Kitsilanonians (Kitsilanonites?) that they eat the new arrivals, but no one has warned against it either.

As a matter of fact, there's a Frenchman in California who says it's a crime the way gardeners there poison snails.

"Snails are low in calories, high in protein, rich in minerals," he insists.

"Would you poison the cows?

"Yet," says the tall, freckled, red-haired Frenchman, "Californians spend millions each year poisoning the snails instead of enjoying the escargots (French for snails) as the piece de resistance of any meal."

Picart says California is a snail paradise.

"There are billions of snails crawling all over California — billions of the same snails that are like caviar to my countrymen," Picart says.

A newcomer to Canada, the European brown garden snail has been found in 17 states and it's threatening some orange groves in California.

The word is that 20 European brown garden snails (let's call it the EBGS) were found in one Kitsilano backyard.

John Gold of Agriculture Canada told the Times it's highly likely the pest will be found in other areas of B.C.

Gold says the snail approaches food much like a slug. It's a scavenger that is fond of brassicas — the cabbage and cauliflower family of plants.

"We haven't got a handle on how serious a problem this is," Gold said. "We'd like to say it's of no concern, but we don't know yet."

Uppermost in the minds of some Vancouver Island gardeners is the worry that the EBGS might somehow cross the Strait of Georgia or Juan de Fuca Strait.

If they do come, remember to be organic in your approach to the problem — don't use pesticides, although Gold says there are good slug baits on the market that will zap the crawly creatures.

But chemicals merely make them unfit for human consumption and it's definitely a no-no to eat any snail that might have been snacking on slug bait.

The preamble of the European authority, Larousse Gastronomique, tells us snails were prized as food as far back as Roman times. In fact, it was a Roman named Fulvius Lupinus who discovered the art of fattening snails.

From another book, The Joy of Cooking, we learn the Romans were so addicted to snails they raised them on ranches and fattened them on bay wine and spicy soups.

There was always the risk of poisoning, and it's easy to suspect that Lupinus tested the end result on his slaves before trying his first land gastropod mollusc (that's what a snail is to the scientists).

Says Larousse: "To avoid the risk of poisoning, snails must be deprived of food for some time before they are eaten, for they may have fed on plants harmless to themselves but poisonous to humans."

The Romans wouldn't have appreciated that method of fattening snails.

"Furthermore, it is advisable only to eat operculated snails, that is to say snails which have sealed themselves into their shells to hibernate."

So don't fight it. With the find in Kitsilano, it's only a matter of time before someone follows the lead of Picart who has borrowed an idea from Roman times.

"I came to California in April last year," Picart said. "It was the spring. It was raining in Santa Rosa.

"I could not believe what was happening before my eyes. Everywhere I looked were the same brown-shelled snails we have in southern France.

"Only the snails in southern France are rapidly disappearing. The demand for snails is so big we have almost completely run out.

He discovered no one was harvesting the snails commercially as a food item in the U.S. That's how F. Picart Snails came to be. He now has a large snail ranch in his backyard in Santa Rosa.

History does repeat itself, doesn't it?

"I hire people to harvest snails from lawns and farms for miles around Santa Rosa. I pay homeowner and farmers 10 to 25 cents a pound for their snails," Picart explained.

Picart has millions of snails in row after row of large boxes in his backyard.

He fattens them and cleans out their systems at the same time by feeding them cabbage and cornmeal.

Picart packages six snails frozen in garlic butter in a ceramic dish with recesses for the escargots. The dish is placed in the oven and, oo-la-la, the piece de resistance.

Already F. Picart Snails are being sold in supermarkets and specialty shops up and down the Pacific Coast from Alaska to California and as far inland as Denver.

"Maybe I will become the snail king of America," he mused.

But what if people should heed his advice and dine on the snails in their backyard?

"It will be fine for my business. Californians will grow to like the snails. After they eat all the snails in their backyards, they will begin to buy the F. Picart Snails in their supermarket," said the Frenchman.

But he warns: "Never eat the snails from your yard until at least six weeks after the poisons have been last used for snail control. And never eat any snails until you have purged their systems for at least 72 hours by feeding them cornmeal."

Mrs. Shirley Colquhoun won't have to visit the imported food section of stores if the European brown garden snail starts invading back yards.

Marina proposal attacked

A proposal to to build a boat marina in Cordova Bay was attacked today by Ald. Sandy Noel of Saanich.

He said construction of a breakwater and marina is an unwelcome intrusion for residents.

"They don't want to look out of their house and see masts and boats blocking their ocean view," he said.

Saanich engineering department has hired a Victoria consulting firm to do an $8,000 environmental study on the concept of a man-made peninsula of five to 15 acres.

The park would be an ongoing project built with municipal fill on part of the Cordova Bay waterfront between Cowichan Head and Cormorant Point. Exact location hasn't been determined.

A questionnaire sent to 600 Saanich residents by Thurber Consultants Ltd., the company conducting the study, suggests a marina and boat launch as one possible use for the marine park.

But Mayor Mel Couvelier said today a boat marina is the most important part of a proposal.

If the marina concept of the multi-use park is unworkable, its likely the idea will be scrapped, he said.

Income from the boat marina would finance development of the rest of the park and the scheme wouldn't be practical without it, he said.

Couvelier compared the proposal to Oak Bay Marina.

However, Noel said there are few good fishing areas along the exposed Cordova Bay shoreline.

"You have to be close to the popular fishing spots, and Sidney Island is about the nearest one," Noel commented.

He said a marina would create traffic and parking problems.

Municial engineer Cliff Warren wants a place to dump the municipality's fill and a breakwater would be an ideal spot, Noel said.

A spokesman for Thurber said the park concept is designed to kill two birds with one stone — find a disposal site for municipal fill and create a recreation area for residents.

The preliminary study will take into account the biological impact, economic and engineering feasibility of the project and should be ready by the end of the month.

About 20 questionnaires have already been returned, most of them negative replies from Cordova Bay residents, according to the spokesman, who said residents have been calling the consulting firm to express disapproval.

Cordova Bay Community Association president Eric Robinson said the association is thinking about calling a public meeting to discuss the proposal.

Blaze set in trailer

City firemen spent nearly two hours early today extinguishing a stubborn fire in some bundles of paper on a tractor trailer parked behind Allen Paper at Wilson and Tyee.

Only about $300 damage was done in the 4 a.m. fire which officials believe was deliberately set.

City bucks upswing in crime

In Victoria and Saanich the rate has declined while in most other areas of the province there has been as much crime or slightly more than last year.

Victoria's number of Criminal Code offences reported to the end of November was 9.3 per cent lower than the 1978 tally.

That's about 1,000 criminal offences less than the previous year and is the most significant drop since 1965 when the city police records section was formed.

Saanich, too, reported a drop of about four per cent in crime to the end of October.

Provincially the trend has been to slight increases. The B.C. Police Commission says the rate was up 1.7 per cent to the end of October.

There was less crime in Victoria in all categories except sex offences and frauds.

Ask the Times

Q: I've noticed these Duffy's cabs running around Victoria. Is there any connection with a large fleet of the same name in Winnipeg? J.E.K.

A. Yes, but only in name. The three owner-operators involved in the local operation came from Winnipeg where they were among the 80 or so owners of the large Duffy's fleet. They decided to use the name here when they established their cab company in the fall of 1978.

Old Legion branch going to auction for back taxes

The old Britannia Legion building at 1616 Blanshard Street goes up for sale at auction next Wednesday to pay $10,315.20 in 1978 property taxes owed by Garden City Developments Ltd.

City solicitor Jakob de Villiers last month obtained an order in B.C. Supreme Court forcing the sale to recover the back taxes. The sheriff will conduct an unreserved auction next week on the property.

Last year, its assessed market value was $465,550.

The city has also filed a writ in the Supreme Court to recover 1979 property taxes totalling $67,886.65 owed by the bankrupt Abacus Cities Ltd. on two Fort Street properties.

De Villiers is asking for a declaration by the court that although the Alberta-based land development company is in receivership under Thorne Riddell Inc., the city has a prior right to the back taxes and can proceed with a forced sale under the Municipal Act to recover them.

One of the Abacus properties — 990 Fort, occupied by the Federal Business Development Bank — was assessed last year at $1,026,000 and the other at 1964 Fort, which houses medical offices and a bank, was valued at $1,646,250.

Fort Victoria Properties Ltd., an Abacus subsidiary through which it owns the Market Square shopping development in downtown Victoria, has paid an instalment of $25,000 on back taxes of $79,685.13 which eliminates the need to enforce a court order for payment the city obtained last year.

Under a tough new policy initiated last fall, the city began prosecuting property owners more than $2,000 in arrears on the current year's taxes as of Oct. 1.

Howie makes it, now works his thumb

This one was a 200-kilometre effort to Port Alberni.

He left Victoria at 10 a.m. Wednesday and arrived at 8:15 a.m. today after two stops in between — at Duncan and Nanaimo.

He doesn't know if his achievement is a record but will check with Guinness Book of Records people just in case.

Howie, who made the run as a personal challenge, won't know how much money he raised until next week when all the pledges come in.

Meanwhile, Howie plans to hitch-hike back to Victoria later today to return to his job-hunting. He's an unemployed stonemason.

WCB appeal system hit

Victoria labor official Jack Scott says the Workers' Compensation Board is discriminating against non-union workers.

He said regulations should be changed so that all workers are treated equally.

Scott, business agent for the Painters' Union, criticized the requirement that claimants must get union support before they can appeal decisions made by the board of review.

Scott said that considering more than half of the work force in B.C. is non-unionized, the requirement doesn't make much sense.

The act says that in cases where the board of review makes a unanimous decision, the claimant can appeal to the next higher body — the board of commissioners — but only if he has support of an organized group of workers or employers.

Lawyer Maria Giardini, a compensation consultant, also feels the requirement is unnecessary.

"What it does is make it more difficult for non-union persons and small employers to pursue that avenue of appeal," she said.

Giardini said there were at least half a dozen cases in 1979 where claimants had to go to a union and ask for support before the commissioners would accept their appeals.

"That's discrimination," Scott said.

"Here we have the labor ministry of a free enterprise government refusing to allow persons to take their cases to the board of commissioners unless they are affiliated with a union."

A WCB spokesman said the requirement was incorporated into the act on July 1, 1974.

He said the intent was to block workers or employers from appealing decisions without sufficient grounds.

Signs: 'Sense of honor'

The city of Victoria is washing its hands of any intramural conflicts between local representatives of the federal political parties on placement of election placards and signs.

City solicitor Jakob de Villiers said Wednesday the Supreme Court of Canada recently declared invalid an Ontario municipal bylaw which banned election signs entirely. The court said municipalities had no power to regulate election signs.

However, it doesn't mean the politicians can put up their signs anywhere they like or on city property, he said.

In the past Victoria has tried to take some action against political parties which erected signs on city property, but at every election city hall has been bombarded with calls from partisans complaining about alleged special treatment given to members of an opposing party.

"Every election since I've been here I've had phone calls from someone in Party A accusing us of giving preferntial treatment to Party B and someone from Party B will call and saying we're giving special treatment to Party A," he said.

This time, said de Villiers, the city will refuse to act on such complaints, citing the high court ruling on election signs.

"We will leave it entirely to their sense of honor," he said.

However, the city reserves the right on its own to remove signs which blatantly offend.

309 IN MEMORIAM

HOBBIS — Hilda, in memory of our dear mother and grandmother, who passed away January 3, 1978.
Mothers Never Really Die —
They Just Keep House Up In The Sky.
Death beckoned her with outstretched hand
And whispered softly of "An Unknown Land" —
But she was not afraid to go
For though the path she did not know,
She took Death's Hand without a fear,
For He who safely brought her here
Had told her He would lead the way
Into Eternity's Bright Day . . .
And so she did not go alone
Into the "Valley That's Unknown" —
She gently took Death By The Hand
And journeyed to "The Promised Land" . . .
And there, with step so light and gay,
She polishes the sun by day
And lights the stars that shine at night
And keeps the moonbeams silvery bright . . .
For Mothers really never die,
They just "Keep House Up In The Sky" . . .
And in the Heavenly Home Above
She waits to "welcome" those she loves.
—Sadly missed by her daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. A. Low (Norah and Sandy) and her granddaughter, Mrs. Grace Turner and family, all of Kamloops, B.C.

309 IN MEMORIAM

GALLEY - In loving memory of a dear mother and grandmother Margaret (Laurie) who passed away Jan. 3, 1978.
In my heart your memory lingers,
Always tender, fond and true;
There's not a day, dear mother,
I do not think of you.
Always remembered by Michael, Craig, Linda and Dave, and grandchildren.

THEY SHALL GROW NOT OLD AS WE WHO ARE LEFT GROW OLD, AGE SHALL NOT WEARY THEM, NOR THE YEARS CONDEMN, AT THE GOING DOWN OF THE SUN, AND IN THE MORNING, WE WILL REMEMBER THEM.
WITH GRATITUDE, SANDS

By LEONARD DOWNIE
Washington Post

LONDON — Britain has launched a billion-dollar "last-chance" attempt during the early 1980s to save its ailing nationalized auto industry from succumbing to international competition and internal decay.

The rescue effort is built around a drastic plan to reorganize, refinance, retool and reform the image of British Leyland, the giant government-owned car maker that now calls itself BL Ltd., and to tackle the critical problem of declining productivity in British industry.

The problem facing Britain in its efforts to keep BL, among the world's 15 largest auto manufacturers, in business, is similar in many ways to that facing the United States in its effort to keep Chrysler from bankruptcy.

In both situations, government financial assistance, labor union concessions and relatively new corporate leadership are expected to play key roles.

Last month, BL's 150,000 employees approved the plan to streamline the firm by eliminating 25,000 jobs, closing all or part of 13 factories, phasing out several models including the venerable MG sports car, and selling off some subsidiaries.

On Dec. 20 the British government agreed to commit to BL up to a billion dollars more in taxpayers' money over the next four years to help finance the development of competitive new cars and commercial vehicles. This nearly doubles the government subsidy to BL.

Last Friday, BL chairman Sir Michael Edwardes signed an agreement with Honda in Tokyo for BL to build and sell exclusively here and in Europe a new medium-sized car designed by Honda, which the Japanese auto maker will market in the rest of the world.

Next, BL must win agreement from its unions on a 1980 labor contract holding down wage increases and making sweeping changes in traditional restrictive work rules that will modernize and increase the productivity of BL plants.

BL plans later in 1980 to introduce its most important internally developed new model, the Mini Metro, a redesigned version of its highly successful small economy car. BL also will mount a major "buy British" promotional campaign.

Edwardes, a cocky, energetic 48-year-old business executive who became BL's chairman two years ago and has directed the daring last-ditch recovery effort, believes he is gaining employee acceptance for his strategy and now must "win the support of the British public."

He said the promotional campaign will emphasize the "enlightened self-interest" the British have in buying British-made cars. A BL spokesman said the British will be told, in effect, "If you don't support your own industry, nobody else will."

BL, the only remaining British-owned car company, is a conglomeration of older firms that made Austin, Morris, Jaguar, Rover, Triumph and MG cars and Leyland trucks and commercial vehicles. Its production ranges from luxury Daimier limousines to tiny Minis.

But BL's production and sales have been steadily failing and that is also true of the foreign-owned segments of the British auto industry. It is one of a number of threatened British manufacturing industries, including steel, shipbuilding, home applainces and textiles, which are suffering from shrinking world markets, more efficient foreign competitors, ineffective British management and the steady decline in the productivity of British workers.

BL has been particularly hard-hit by past management confusion, inefficient production methods and frequent labor disputes. BL produces only half as many cars per employee as its European or Japanese competitors.

Edwardes decided to tackle BL's problems at the roots by trying to make each model and plant pay for itself. Unproductive plants were to be closed and unprofitable models replaced.

When BL's union shop stewards refused to accept the plant closings and job cuts in his plant, Edwardes and the BL board put the question to a vote of all BL employees. About 80 per cent participated in the mail ballot and more than 87 per cent of those voting backed Edwardes' plan.

Edwardes helped build the majority by telling the employees that BL could not survive without the cutbacks and that employees who lost their jobs could be compensated by $10,000 or more each in severance pay. The vote, he said, showed that union shop stewards "have not always represented the wishes of those they represent."

When some of the shop stewards tried to organize worker resistance to the recovery plan desite the vote, Edwardes took the unprecedented step of firing ringleader Derek Robinson, a veteran militant union leader at BL. When workers began walking off their jobs in support of Robinson, Edwardes told national union leaders that a strike would kill BL. They agreed, instead, to submit the case to a board of inquiry.

Impressed by Edwardes' initial success, Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's Conservative government decided to increase BL's government subsidy to help finance the recovery plan, although Thatcher's industry secretary, Keith Joseph, warned, "Success cannot by any means be guaranteed."

Edwardes now must convince BL's unions to agree to a 1980 contract under which wage increases may be limited to 5 percent — less than a third of Britain's inflation rate and of the average of other pay settlements in British industry — and to agree to drastic work rule changes.

"We cannot live on government money forever."

U.S. again selling arms to Taiwan

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The U.S. State Department said Thursday it is resuming the sale of defensive arms to Taiwan, including sophisticated guided missile systems.

The announcement follows termination at the end of 1979 of the formal defence treaty between Taiwan and the United States. In keeping with earlier announced plans, the State Department said it will sell Taiwan about $280 million worth of weapons, including anti-tank and anti-aircraft missile systems.

A spokesman said the Peoples Republic of China has been notified of the intention to resume arms sales to Taiwan, after a one-year pause.

According to the State Department, the new arms will include:

—TOW anti-tank missiles, which can be carried by helicopters and are steered by a wire-controlled guidance system.

—Rapid-fire 76mm anti-aircraft gun systems.
